Amelia Earhart Reaches Hawaii, Breaks Record

Hopes to Leave in 8 Hours for Howland Island; Leads 2 Clippers.

Honolulu, March 18.—Amelia Earhart streaked out of the East today with a trans-Pacific speed mark, brushed her hair and caught a nap for the next over-water jump of her flight around the world—a 1,532-mile adventure to tiny Howland Island. She hoped to take off again early tomorrow if weather permits. "I'm terribly tired," she said as she told of handling the controls most of last night, relinquishing them only as she approached Wheeler Field for a landing. Although Miss Earhart and her crew of three men deliberately throttled down the $80,000 Flying Laboratory to save it for other perilous stretches on the world flight, it covered the 2,400 miles from Oakland, Calif., in 15 hours 51½ minutes. This trimmed 1 hour 6½ minutes from the previous mark of 16 hours 58 minutes by the Hawaii Clipper last December.

Amid the cheers of several hundred early morning spectators, some of them still in evening dress, Miss Earhart stepped out of the plane behind Paul Mantz. Then came her navigators, Capt. Harry Manning and Fred J. Noonan. Still bareheaded and wearing slacks and leather jacket, Miss Earhart received flower leis from a reception committee of Army officers. Asked how the flight compared with her solo hop from Honolulu to Oakland in 1935, Miss Earhart said it seemed "longer."

It was not longer, however. Her flight of January 11, 1935, required 18 hours 16 minutes to cover the same 2,400 miles in the other direction. A few minutes after the landing Miss Earhart was driven to the home of Lieut. Col. John McDonnell for a rest, while Mantz, her technical adviser, groomed her plane for the trip over the hitherto unforgotten miles to Howland Island. Although Miss Earhart's plane was the last of three big planes to take off from Oakland for the overnight ocean flight, she was far in the van of two sky clippers at the finish.

Proctor Takes Step To Obtain Divorce For Mrs. Simpson

London, March 18.—England's ponderous divorce machinery seemingly moved a step nearer to giving Wallis Warfield Simpson her freedom tonight so that she can wed Edward Windsor. The King's proctor, powerful behind-the-scenes figure in the drama which shook the world, actively entered the case with an unexpected petition—but one which legal authorities said boded well for Mrs. Simpson's chance of winning an absolute divorce decree April 27. The proctor, Sir Thomas Barnes, is to appear tomorrow before Sir Boyd Merriman, president of the divorce court, for "directions."

Legal authorities said they considered the petition for instructions as the proctor's next to last step before permitting Mrs. Simpson's divorce decree, obtained at Ipswich on October 27, 1936, to become final.

House Passes Neutrality Bill By 374 to 12

Riding to a crushing victory that nearly obliterated the advocates of mandatory neutrality, the House passed the neutrality bill by a vote of 374 to 12. The bill significantly had been amended to put cash-and-carry neutrality on a two-year trial basis as a national peace policy. This amendment, introduced by Representative James A. Shanley (Democrat) of Connecticut, was approved by Chairman Samuel D. McReynolds of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, author of the bill.

McReynolds, admitting there may be a fight in House-Senate conference over the differences between the Pittman bill that passed the Senate and his own measure, told reporters: "We'll stand back of this bill to the limit."

The Pittman bill allows the President discretion over the "cash-and-carry" provisions, but is mandatory in its "cash" legislation. The McReynolds bill allows the President wide discretion in both instances.

The two-year trial, allowing the cash-and-carry provisions to expire May 1, 1939, was regarded as a concession to the mandatory neutrality proponents in both House and Senate.

The 12 who voted against the McReynolds measure in the House last night were Robert L. Bacon (Republican), New York; John Tamm (Republican), Virginia; John T. Gurnea (Republican), North Dakota; John M. Coffey (Democrat), Washington; Everett M. Dirksen (Republican), Illinois; Louis Ludlow (Democrat), Indiana; Noah M. Mason (Republican), Illinois; Jerry J. O'Connell (Democrat), Missouri; John M. Robison (Republican), Kentucky; and one other.

Court Reform Is Vital Need, Says Law Dean

T.F. Konop, of Notre Dame, Calls President's Plan a 'Safety Valve.'

An "outraged" people will "by amendment sweep the Supreme Court out of the constitutional picture" unless the Constitution is reinterpreted, the Senate Judiciary Committee was warned yesterday. Robust, white-haired Dean Thomas F. Konop, of the Notre Dame University law school, told Senators the President's court plan is a "safety valve" to save the Supreme Court and its jurisdiction. But on cross-examination he testified there is "no certainty" it would solve the problem.

Konop, a former member of Congress, said the Supreme Court "is usurping the power of Congress and the President." Construction of the "spirit" as well as the "substance" of the Constitution is needed, he said. His testimony followed sharp examination of Dean Leon Green, of the Northwestern University law school, who told the committee some "political control" of the Supreme Court was contemplated in the Constitution. Green charged the court majority with an "intolerant" attitude toward congressional legislation.

The Notre Dame law dean said action by the people would be provoked by the "inability of Congress and the President to protect them and their resources." "We will then have an amendment which will deny the power of the Supreme Court to sit in judgment upon congressional legislation and probably State legislation as well," said Konop.

The witness said the country had been "jolting" by Supreme Court decisions "striking social and beneficial laws from the statute books." "Ought we to be surprised that there is some discontent among our people?" he asked.

Schoolgirls Describe Death Of Other Pupils in Explosion

One Saw Teacher Buried Beneath Mass of Falling Bricks. Children Blown Through Roof, Leaped From Shattered Walls.

Kilgore, Tex., March 18.—Lying on a hospital cot here, blonde, gray-eyed Paula Echols, 15, student in the New London school, still shook from fright tonight as she told of the explosion which demolished the building and killed hundreds of her schoolmates.

"Everything was very quiet and about 20 of us were studying English in our classroom," she said, "when the building seemed to shake and the entire roof fell in on us, all at once." "A huge mass of brick and mortar fell between my desk and my teacher, burying her except for one leg and a corner of her desk." "Everyone started screaming and a boy seated across the aisle from me cried, 'Oh, help me!'" "I was pinned underneath my desk, unable to move. One of the boys seated next to the window, who was not struck by the falling beam, pulled me out and crawled outside with me."

"The only thing I remember was that as the building started to crumble I saw a huge piece of stone hurtle through the air and pass completely through the body of an automobile parked near the building."

"The worst part of the explosion seemed to come from the front of the building. The students sitting in the back of my classroom were completely covered, while those on the front row were able to be carried out."

"Our classroom was located at about the middle of the building, on the north side."

Aviator Loses 3 Children.

New London, Tex., March 18 (AP). Three of Joe Davidson's four children lost their lives in the London Consolidated School blast.

"This is the worst I have ever known," said the 54-year-old World War aviator and holder of the Croix de Guerre. Planes twice were shot down under him during the war.

Paris Beauty, Who Shot Count, Tells in Diary Of Intimacy With 'Great Italian Statesman'

Paris, March 18.—Police tonight announced discovery of an intimate diary of Mme. Madeline la Ferriere, brunette beauty held for the shooting of Count Charles de Chamburn, describing relations with a "great Italian statesman."

Extracts from the diary, read to newspapermen by Mme. La Ferriere's lawyer in the presence of investigating Magistrate Le Girard, told of secret meetings with the "great statesman" in the inner recesses of a famous Roman palace.

One entry, as read by her lawyer, said: "Today," he said, "Ethiopia no longer means anything to me; now I only have the sweet memories of this unforgettable hour of love."

The extracts which were read showed the love affair reached a climax in July, 1936, and after that she was unsuccessful in seeing the "great statesman."

Their meetings, the diary recorded, always were arranged through a third person.

Count de Chamburn, wounded in the thigh as he boarded a train for Brussels yesterday, remained at a private hospital, where it was said his condition was not serious.

Mme. La Ferriere was granted several interviews by Premier

Truce Reached As Miss Perkins And Rand Meet

Agree on Basis for Ending Strike After Day-Long Parley.

On the Strike Front. A basis for settlement of the strike at its plants of Remington-Rand, Inc., was settled after a day-long conference in Secretary Perkins' office.

Sit-down strikers in a Woolworth five-and-ten-cent store in New York were removed by force.

Six thousand Chrysler strikers wait court developments today on their eviction from Detroit plants in which they are barricaded.

By William V. Nessler. A basis for settlement of the protracted and often violent strike at six plants of Remington-Rand, Inc., was agreed upon last night after a day-long conference at the offices of Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins.

The terms were accepted by James H. Rand, Jr., president of the corporation; William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and other officials of the company and the federation.

Pending acceptance of the adjustment by the employees involved and by the board of directors of the company, its terms were not made public. However, Rand said that it would involve employment of about 1,200 strikers who have not returned to the company's employ or found other jobs.

Long Parley Held. The conference and adjustment have nothing to do with the order of the National Labor Relations Board, issued on Monday, which directed Remington-Rand to re-employ 4,000 strikers and severely criticized the labor policies of the company, which it termed "medieval." In effect, however, it was assumed that the agreement would make unnecessary enforcement of the labor board's order.

Those participating in the conference yesterday were Rand, J. W. Simpson, Loring R. Hoover and Vernon Lowrey, all officials of the company; Green, John P. Frey, president of the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. of L., and Arthur O. Wharton, president of the International Association of Machinists, for the labor side, and Miss Perkins, Assistant Secretary of Labor Edward F. McGrady and Conciliator P. W. Chappell.

The bitterness that marked the long strike, called last May, was entirely absent as the conferees struggled through hours of negotiations. All were in a cheerful, laughing mood, apparently, when the conference broke up about 7 p. m. Rand thanked Secretary Perkins for holding the conference and he and Green posed for photographers smiling and shaking hands.

The statement issued by the conferees said that Green, Frey and

School Blast Worst In History of Nation

Martial Law Declared as 1,500 Search Wreckage for Bodies; State Rushing Help to Area.

Additional Pictures on Pages 3, 4, 6 and 18.

New London, Tex., March 18.—An amazing explosion killed hundreds of children here today, blasting apart their million dollar schoolhouse—ten minutes before dismissal.

Toll of the disaster—its cause a mystery—mounted rapidly tonight as hundreds of mangled bodies were taken from the wreckage. Troy Duran, principal of the school, estimated 600 students and teachers were killed. At dusk 300 bodies had been recovered.

It was the worst disaster of its kind in the Nation's history.

Gov. James V. Allred declared martial law in the precinct and ordered in National Guard troops. The Governor acted on information that the State highway patrol and other officers were unable to control the throngs that blocked highways and impeded relief work.

Seven hundred pupils and 40 teachers were in the two-story brick high school, central unit of the London Consolidated School, when it was suddenly blown to bits by the explosion. Most of them were in the school's huge auditorium.

With a force of tremendous proportions the walls of the building began to shake. Pupils and teachers alike were trapped. A low rumble sounded. Many thought it was a boiler explosion. None was sure hours later.

Superintendent Blames Gas for Blast.

Superintendent of Schools W. C. Shaw, who himself lost a son in the explosion, said he believed that it was caused by an accumulation of gas in the basement of the school. The building is situated in the heart of the rich east Texas oil fields. The building was heated by gas-steam radiators and there was no main boiler.

Witnesses said there was an ear-humming explosion after the grumbling roar that preceded the blast. The roof then, they said, moved up, the walls crashed outward and the roof fell into the wreckage, crushing those within.

The high school building was wrecked. Flames shot forth for a time. Nearby stood the grade school—empty—its several hundred pupils having already been dismissed for the day.

100 Bodies Taken to Nearby Town.

Bricks hurtled through the air for a quarter of a mile. Children were decapitated. Some were mangled. Some lost limbs.

Shaw likened the victims to rag dolls with their clothes torn off. Some of the bodies were near the edge of the desolate heap of wreckage.

Rescue workers removed these first. One hundred bodies

Pontiff Urges World to Join Fight on Reds

Pope Warns Communism Undermines Foundations of Society.

Vatican City, March 18.—Pope Pius XI, condemning "atheistic communism" as a false doctrine undermining the "very foundations of society," appealed today to "all those who believe in God to resist the furious attacks of the godless."

The pontiff, in a lengthy encyclical entitled "Divine Redemption," declared Communist logic and employed the world to resist its spread by a return to the concepts of the church and by meeting "the great duties imposed by justice."

He urged that all differences be submerged so that the world's forces, Catholic and non-Catholic, church and state, might be arrayed to defend its institutions.

"Acknowledging that communism's objective of righting for labor 'the very real abuses' of the economic order are 'entirely and undoubtedly legitimate,'" the Pope pleaded for the employers of labor to stand behind the church in seeing justice done.

"The wage-earner," he said, "is not to receive as alms what is his due in justice. Let no one attempt with trifling charitable donations to exempt himself from the great duties imposed by justice."

Subversive Ideas Growing.

The Pope assailed the theoreticians of communism as "inimical to mankind" and declared "the bitter fruits of subversive ideas which we foresee and foretell" are multiplying.

"According to this doctrine," he declared, "there is in the world only one reality, matter, prime forces which evolve into plant, animal and man."

"Even human society is nothing but phenomena and a form of matter evolving in the same way. By the law of inexorable necessities and through perpetual conflict of forces, matter moves toward the final synthesis of classless society."

"In such a doctrine, as is evident, there is no room for the idea of God; there is no difference between matter and spirit, between soul and body; there is neither the survival of the soul after death nor any hope of a future life."

"Thus, man's liberty is destroyed. Every right of the human person is denied. Man becomes, as it were, a mere cog in the collectivist machinery which alone has unlimited control over the lives of men. All hierarchy of authority is nullified."

Family Is Profaned.

"The dignity of the indissolubility of marriage is set aside. The family is profaned. The woman is torn from her home and from the care of her children. Religion is dubbed an opiate. The very idea of God is rejected and condemned."

"Communism, therefore, is a system full of errors and sophism. It is in opposition to both reason and divine revelation."

"It is subversive to the social order because it means the destruction of its foundations; because it ignores the true origin and purpose of the state; because it denies the right, dignity and liberty of human personality."

Those who permit themselves to be deceived into lending their aid toward the triumph of a doctrine "intrinsically wrong," the Pope declared, will fall first as victims of their error. No one, he said, who would save Christian civilization can may collaborate with communism in any undertaking.

The Pope deplored the "truly diabolical perfection" of Communist propaganda, whose evil effects, he asserted, already are evident in Mexico, Spain and Russia.

He emphasized the importance of more energetic resistance and declared the church should lead the way.

Declaring that "even in Catholic countries there still are too many who are Catholic only in name," the pontiff pleaded for Christian charity to commiserate and help those who suffer, and for justice in recognizing "the inalienable right of the workingman to a salary sufficient for himself and his family."

In the front line of the battle against communism, he said, should stand priests supported by religious groups and the states.

"This means all diligence should be exercised by States to prevent within their territory ravages of the anti-God campaign which shakes society to the very foundation," he said.

"For there can be no authority on earth unless the authority of Divine Majesty be recognized."

Stock Sales Suit Filed Against Gun Company

The Securities and Exchange Commission filed a bill of complaint in the District Court yesterday seeking to enjoin Automatic Guns, Inc., of Washington, and William R. Baldwin, of Elk Mills, Md., president of the company, from further sales of that company's common stock in violation of the registration requirements of the securities act of 1933, as amended.

Automatic Guns, Inc., waived affidavits and notice of hearing and consented to a permanent injunction before Justice Lettis.

The Securities and Exchange Commission asked for the injunction on the basis of allegations that since July 27, 1933, the defendant corporation, through its officers, directors and agents, have publicly sold 142,788 shares of unissued stock of the corporation without their being registered with the commission, as required by the act.

Excerpts From Pope's Talk on Communism

Vatican City, March 18.—The text of the Vatican abstract on Pope Pius' encyclical on atheistic communism:

The encyclical, divided into chapters and numbered paragraphs, begins by pointing out the serious danger to which all nations are exposed by the inroads of communism.

After recalling how his predecessors and he, himself, had more than once called the attention of the world to this danger, the holy father asserts the necessity of a new, solemn document.

"Therefore we believe it to be our duty to raise our voice once more in a still more solemn misadventure in the world today only one reality, matter, prime forces which evolve into plant, animal and man."

"We wish this still the more because our words are now receiving sorry confirmation from the spectacle of bitter fruits of subversive ideas which we foresee and foretell, multiplying fearfully in countries already stricken, or threatening every other country of the world."

The doctrine of communism was founded on the principles of dialectical and historical materialism previously advocated by Marx and, of which, the theoreticians of bolshevism tried to prevent the final genuine interpretation.

Even Society Nothing.

"According to this doctrine there is in the world today only one reality, matter, prime forces which evolve into plant, animal and man."

"Thus, man's liberty is destroyed. Every right of the human person is denied. Man becomes, as it were, a mere cog in the collectivist machinery which alone has unlimited control over the lives of men. All hierarchy of authority is nullified."

"In such a doctrine, as is evident, there is no room for the idea of God; there is no difference between matter and spirit, between soul and body; there is neither the survival of the soul after death nor any hope of a future life."

"Thus, man's liberty is destroyed. Every right of the human person is denied. Man becomes, as it were, a mere cog in the collectivist machinery which alone has unlimited control over the lives of men. All hierarchy of authority is nullified."

System of Errors.

"Communism therefore is a system full of errors and sophism. It is in opposition to both reason and divine revelation."

"It is subversive to the social order because it means the destruction of its foundations; because it ignores the true origin and purpose of the state; because it denies the right, dignity and liberty of human personality."

"That a system so obviously erroneous should be so widely accepted is due to the false ideal of justice and equality which communism has held up to the masses, promising elimination of many undeniable abuses and improvement of the condition of the poor working man.

"Deceived by the theses and promises, they have blindly followed the prophets of the new doctrine, unable to perceive the very serious errors of communism."

"By pretending to desire only betterment of the condition of the working classes, by urging removal of the very real abuses chargeable to a liberalistic economic order and by demanding a more equitable distribution of this world's goods (an objective entirely and undoubtedly legitimate), Communists take advantage of the present world-wide economic crisis to draw into the sphere of their influence even those sections of the populace which on principle reject all forms of materialism and terrorism."

In addition to the sad plight in which liberal economic have left the workingman, two other factors undoubtedly hastened this diffusion: Clever, widespread propaganda organized with truly diabolical perfection and the inexplicable silence of a large section of the press in the face of the spread of communism."

Sad Effects Evident.

Meanwhile, the sad effects of the evil already are evident in several nations, such as Mexico and Spain and especially Russia, which was chosen, so to speak, as the ground for this new doctrine. The real Russian people, saddened and oppressed, the Holy Father offers an expression of his paternal sympathy.

"In making these observations it is no part of our intention to condemn en masse the people of the Soviet Union. For them we cherish the warmest paternal affection. We are well aware that the best of them groan beneath the yoke imposed on them by men who in a very large part are strangers to the real Russian people."

"We recognize many others have been deceived by these fallacious hopes. We blame only the system with its authors and abettors who considered Russia the best prepared field for experimenting with a plan elaborated decades ago and, who, from there continued to spread it from one end of the world to the other."

To the errors of communism the pontiff opposes the doctrines of the Catholic Church which, acknowledging its God as a Creator, Judge and Loving Father, proclaims the equality of the brotherhood of man and defends the liberty of man and the rights of the human person.

Proposes Remedies.

"The church does not separate the proper regard for temporal welfare from solicitude for the eternal. If she subordinates the former to the latter—according to the words of her Divine Founder, Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His justice, and all these things shall be added unto you—she is nevertheless so far from being unconcerned with human affairs and so far from hindering civil progress and material advancement that she actually fosters and promotes them in the most sensible and efficacious manner."

After this point the Holy Father proposes remedies to be applied against very grave modern ills, remedies which he epitomizes by inviting all his children to a renewal of Christian life.

"Even in Catholic countries there are still too many who are Catholic hardly more than in name."

In particular, the Holy Father recommends to the faithful detachment from worldly goods, Christian charity and especially justice; detachment from worldly possessions for these do not constitute man's true goods; Christian charity which should move all to commiserate and help those who suffer; justice above all which should induce employers and the wealthy to recognize the inalienable right of the workingman to a salary sufficient for himself and his family and safeguard, even in labor, his lofty dignity as a man and child of God.

"The wage earner is not to receive as alms what is his due in justice, let no one attempt with trifling charitable donations to exempt himself from the great duties imposed by justice."

"Both justice and charity often dictate obligations touching upon the same subject matter, but under different aspects; and the very dignity of the workingman makes him justly and acutely sensitive to the duties of others in this regard."

The Pope then recommends a better understanding and fuller study of the doctrine of the church, which alone, in the name of Jesus Christ, can point out the path to true civil progress.

Action must be joined to study if the Communist enterprise is to be effectively resisted.

Communism is intrinsically wrong and no one who would save Christian civilization may collaborate with it in any undertaking whatsoever.

Those who permit themselves to be deceived into lending their aid toward the triumph of communism in their own country will first fall as victims to their error.

"And because of the greater antiquity and grandeur of Christian civilization in the region where communism successfully penetrates, so much more devastating will be the hatred displayed by the godless."

Priests Should Lead.

In the front line of this battle against communism, says the holy father, should stand the priests, whose duty it is to show the way to all others by word and example.

After a special appeal to Catholics, workers and nonworkers, to put aside their vain trifling differences and unite in this great struggle, the holy father pleads with all those who believe in God to resist the furious attack of the godless.

Every state should play a vital part in the attainment and hope for victory by aiding the activity of the church, by adopting timely measures and by giving an example of wise, prudent administration.

Safety Patrol Seizes Driver In Fast Chase

Taximan Gives Hazardous Exhibit of Carelessness in Busy Traffic.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

(Winner of first prize in the National I. T. T. Safety Contest with his 1936 series appearing on The Post.)

Just before the afternoon rush-hour yesterday—as downtown traffic lanes teemed with homeward-bound motorists—a thoughtless taxi driver, apparently determined to reach his destination at any cost, created a furor along Constitution avenue with a hazardous exhibition of careless driving.

But he was just one of numerous drivers, encountered by the new safety patrol yesterday, who showed evident recklessness. More negligent motorists were observed during yesterday's cruise than at any time since the patrol started.

The taxi man ran afoul of the patrol car and Policeman George M. Patton near Fourteenth street and Constitution avenue. White traffic lines were being painted on the street and the intersection was jammed with cars waiting to pass in single file.

As the patrol car took its position in line, the taxi passed on the right and wedged its way toward the head of the procession. Warning flags were strung across two lanes of the street, forcing traffic into the outside lane.

The signal light at the corner was red. As it changed and vehicles started to move, the heedless taxi driver swerved into line ahead of other cars. Brakes were applied quickly and several drivers shouted at the "cheating" taxi.

A Difficult Chase.

But the driver paid no attention. Policeman Patton had difficulty in starting pursuit because of congestion caused by the taxi driver's tactics.

And when a clear way was opened, the taxi was far ahead, traveling at a high rate and weaving in and out. Other motorists attempted to avoid collisions.

The taxi was paced at 38 miles an hour for several blocks. (The speed limit at this point is 22 miles an hour.) The driver insisted on crowding to the left and it was some distance before Patton could overtake him.

Asked why he was driving in such a manner, the taxi man responded: "My passenger said she was in a hurry to reach the Senate Office Building."

There was a young woman in the rear seat. She smiled at the driver's spook.

"Do you always drive like that?" asked Patton.

"Oh, no," answered the driver, "in fact, I haven't been arrested in three years."

Passenger Blamed.

He couldn't explain why he cut in ahead of traffic or why he was weaving down the street—except to lay all the blame on his passenger.

When the driver admitted reading of current efforts to promote highway safety and reduce accidents, Patton ordered him to appear in court today for an explanation.

Each driver accosted yesterday—and there were many—smilingly acknowledged he or she was wrong, but wanted "another chance." They also knew of present safety efforts.

On Benning road northeast at Arkansas avenue, another driver drove swiftly past a "stop" sign and pulled directly into traffic ahead of a large truck. The truck was forced to swing wide to avoid an accident.

Said the offending motorist: "I was busy talking and didn't see the sign."

He was ordered to post collateral on a ticket.

A woman driving along upper Connecticut avenue was "astonished" to find herself questioned by Policeman Patton.

Unaware of Speed Limit.

From Tilden street to Military road, she was paced at speeds varying between 35 and 45 miles an hour. Due to heavy traffic and the danger of risking lives of other motorists, Patton was unable to overtake her in a shorter distance.

"Why, I was watching my speedometer and it never registered more than 35 miles an hour," said the woman.

This speed, in any section of the city, is a violation of regulations, Patton pointed out.

"Oh, but I didn't intend to violate the law—I thought the speed limit was 35 miles an hour," said the woman.

She said she had been driving in the District for several years.

"I suggest you study the regulations before meeting me in court. I'll charge you with speed 40 miles an hour," said Patton.

Begs for Leniency.

The woman begged for "leniency," asserting:

"This almost breaks my heart."

She apparently didn't think of the broken bones which might have resulted from an accident.

To each motorist he stopped yesterday, Patton gave a brief lesson in safety. He urged co-operation in the authorities' efforts to improve traffic conditions and warned of the consequences when laws are violated. Said one driver after Patton's lecture:

The convicted slayer was revived by a physician more than 158 hours after she lapsed into a subconscious coma brought on, doctors say, because her conscious mind could not "digest" the horror of her recent experiences.

Store Strikers Ousted in N.Y.; Unrest Grows

Printers in Indianapolis Voted Tie-up; Auto Plants Barred.

By the Associated Press.

Sit-down strikers in a New York Woolworth 5-and-10 cent store were removed by force last night while union printers in all three of the Indianapolis, Ind., newspapers voted to go on strike at once and Michigan's labor trouble moved toward a climax.

The following developments marked a day in which labor unrest spread further across the Nation:

Six thousand Chrysler strikers awaited developments behind barricaded factory gates in Detroit after further legal steps toward their forcible eviction were delayed. A "final" court hearing was set for 9 a. m. today after Chrysler attorneys conferred with Circuit Judge Allan Campbell, who issued an injunction disregarding by the strikers.

The United Press reported that John L. Lewis, leader of the Committee for Industrial Organization, had agreed to a "face-to-face" conference with Walter P. Chrysler. Chrysler could not be reached for a statement as to whether he would agree to the meeting.

Gov. Frank Murphy of Michigan, struggling to solve the Chrysler impasse and other labor troubles in the State, declared that the action of persons who called a sit-down strike at the Frank & Seder Department Store was "a raid" and "a modified form of banditry and must be treated as such." The strike, termed a "mistake," was of brief duration.

In the New York 5-and-10 store, 50 strikers, 44 of them women, were arrested on disorderly conduct charges when they refused to leave the store.

In Indianapolis, Glenn L. Mitchell, president of the Indianapolis Typographical Union, No. 1, announced that union printers of all three of Indianapolis newspapers—the News, Star and Times—had voted to go on strike.

Calls Strike Wrong.

At Miami, Fla., Charles P. Howard, president of the International Typographical Union, said last night the strike of the newspaper printers was a "direct violation of an obligation."

Earlier in Detroit the Rev. Frederic Siedenberg, S. J., University of Detroit dean, was appointed chairman of the mediation board of three which grew out of Gov. Murphy's "law and order" conference Wednesday.

Wages were raised on a large sector of the textile industry on the eve of the start of the Committee for Industrial Organization campaign to enroll more than 1,000,000 workers.

About 44,500 employees in the Carolinas will benefit from pay raises announced yesterday. Increases were sighted for thousands more.

Stanley Hillman, chosen by the C. I. O. last week to lead the textile drive, called the textile workers' organizing committee together in New York. The union claims 100,000 already are under the C. I. O. banner.

Hillman said the campaign would be "the greatest effort of the C. I. O. Chicago, with a heavy concentration of police reserves in the Loop area, was relatively quiet after Wednesday's outbreak of violence in the 13-day drivers' strike. Acting Police Commissioner John Prendergast conferred with Federal conciliators and Joseph Jacobs, attorney for the strikers.

Three Strikes Ended.

Three strikes started and ended in Fisher Body Plant No. 1 at Flint, Mich. About 500 women and 60 men took part in the demonstration, for which union leaders disclaimed responsibility. The employees agreed to resume work pending negotiation of their demands.

A bill presented to the Michigan Legislature would impose heavy penalties for such strikes. A companion bill would do the same to employers and employees who refused to arbitrate.

Agreement on wages increases for 8,000 employees of Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. was announced in Pittsburgh.

Other pay boosts were for 2,500 workers in the petroleum industry at Oklahoma City and 750 others at Kilgore, Tex.

Rev. Joseph Rick Returning to India

The Rev. Joseph Rick, former Notre Dame football player from Houston, Tex., now a missionary in Bengal, India, was preparing yesterday to return to India, perhaps never to see his native land again.

Father Joseph was in this country to collect funds for his mission. He stayed at Catholic University at the Holy Cross Seminary, where he received his training for the priesthood. He leaves Washington Monday.

Quake Felt on Coast.

Riverside, Calif., March 18 (U.P.)—A slight earthquake rattled windows and dishes here at 5:21 tonight, but no damage was reported.

At Kansas City officers were investigating a disturbance in which a blonde organizer of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union had a set-to with a brunette nonunion worker. A photographer happened to be in the vicinity when the battle started.

Law Dean Calls Court Change A 'Safety Valve' for Nation

People?" Konop testified. "That there are sit-down strikes and disorders, that there is disrespect for law and order, and that a crime wave still persists?"

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming, asked Konop what solution the President's plan offered.

"That will depend on how the court rules," said the witness.

"But there is no certainty," said O'Mahoney.

"Certainly there is none," replied Konop.

"Then what does this bill solve?" asked O'Mahoney.

"It increases the size of the court," said the witness.

"But what will be the result?" pressed O'Mahoney.

"That depends on what a court of 15 judges would say," said Konop.

Konop frequently used the term "packing" in referring to enlargement of the court. Senator Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, asked if he called it that.

"I have no objection to the phrase, or of 'unpacking' either," said the dean.

Wants Younger Judges.

"I gather you feel that when a decision of a judge is not satisfactory, you should change the judge," said O'Mahoney. Konop said he didn't mean that. He said younger men added to the court would bring a different interpretation of the Constitution.

In his opening statement, the witness said the present trend started when the Supreme Court held that corporations were "persons" under the Fourteenth amendment.

"It practically destroyed all powers of the States to regulate and control the corporations, the very 'persons' that the States created," Konop said. "That was the beginning of the oppression of the people by organized and soulless corporate greed."

Dean Green of Northwestern University, who had listened all Wednesday to Prof. Corwin's testimony, took the witness stand at 10 a. m. and was not released until 4 p. m., except for noon recess.

Green was questioned by Senator Connally (Democrat) of Texas, on pencilled changes in his manuscript, and denied he had submitted his statement to the Justice Department. He said he had shown it to Forrest Black and Thurman Arnold, special Assistant Attorneys General, who were present at the hearing, but they were "old friends." He said the changes made in his statement had been his own.

Connally asked Green if he were "a candidate for the Circuit Court of Appeals."

Favors Minority Voice.

"Some of my friends have recommended me for an appointment, but I am not a candidate," said Green.

Here Chairman Ashurst counseled Green not to "worry" that "many Senators are feverishly yearning for such an appointment."

O'Mahoney denied Senators had such "yearning." He said their vote on the Supreme Court retirement bill probably would disqualify them from appointments.

But that doesn't alter the fact that many Senators yearn for an office where they will not meet the people," laughed Ashurst.

Green told the committee he had no objection to 5-to-4 decisions "now and then" and no objection to older judges on the bench, but did not think they should "carry the full burden." He said he thought "every judge should be his own man."

minority voice on the court, he said, was a "valuable thing."

The witness said he favored a change in the size of the court only in a "crisis" when the legislative program of a President and a Congress was stopped by the court.

Burke asked him what he meant by a "crisis," and Green submitted a list of ten legislative problems, including labor, social security, conservation of resources and use of credit for public works.

"In my opinion the country is in a crisis until these questions are solved," Green testified.

Quotes From Speech

Burke said the Supreme Court had ruled on only a few of the problems cited, and charged Green with "replying only in generalities."

"If that is all you mean by a crisis, I think I shall sleep peacefully tonight," Burke said.

Earlier, the Nebraskan had quoted from the October, 1934, issue of the Journal of the American Judicial Society, which printed a speech by Green.

Burke quoted Green as saying in the speech that "the American court system is safe from legislative and executive interference," but questioning "whether it is safe from popular attack."

According to Burke, Green had said: "I suppose no one thinks that the Supreme Court is not a part of our Government, and not subject to political control, however remote it may be."

"How can you have a politically controlled court and at the same time have an independent judiciary?" replied Green.

When Burke asked if he wanted justices to realize "that when the powers" the witness said he put it "a little stronger."

"I think the court should be as independent, or more so, than the Senate," said Green.

"Ward Politics" Denied.

"But you admit that addition of six justices is an exercise of political control over the court?" asked Burke.

"That's the degree of political control contemplated in the Constitution," said Green. "That's not ward politics."

Union Battle Is Described at Senate Hearing

Witness Declares Crowd Was in Plant to Beat Labor Leaders.

By the Associated Press.

L. G. Cleere, a former employee in the Goodyear tire plant at Gadsden, Ala., told Senate investigators yesterday a crowd which beat union officials there was organized in the plant dining room and deputized by city police.

Testifying before the Civil Liberties Committee, he said he was one of about 50 Goodyear employees who were instructed to arm themselves with guns or other weapons.

Although he saw the attack on the headquarters of the United Rubber Workers at Gadsden at about 12:30 p. m. last June 25, Cleere continued, he did not participate in it or in the subsequent beating of union officials.

Joined Organization.

Later, he testified, he became friendly with union officials and joined their organization. When he did this he said, he received warning that "the boys" would "get" him, and fled Gadsden under State highway police protection.

Cleere said the crowd which entered the union headquarters and assaulted John House, organizer, and Elzie Gray, local president of the union, was led by T. L. Bottoms, a personnel clerk being trained for management.

He asserted Bottoms first asked him to attend a meeting in the dining room about the middle of last June.

Bottoms explained, the witness went on, that an organization was to be formed of Goodyear employees and a "gang" from the Gulf State steel plant and the Dwight Manufacturing Co. also of Gadsden, to "help break up the union."

"Seeking Promotion."

The meeting, he continued, was attended chiefly by "fellows working for promotion, several foremen and a few shop workers who had good recommendations from Mike Self or the sheriff." Mike Self, he explained, was a watchman at the Gulf State plant who once had asked him to report on union activities.

Bottoms, Cleere testified, made a speech, in which he said: "We're not going to let these damn Yankees come down here and take our jobs. Remember, the company and the law are behind you, and if anything happens you won't be in jail two minutes."

Bottoms called the "deputized Goodyear men" together again on June 23, the witness continued, and told them of a scheme to raid union headquarters the following day.

Cleere said Bottoms promised that the sheriff's telephone would be "busy" and other authorities would be "out of reach."

Strike Agreement Is Reached As Rand Meets Miss Perkins

Basis for Settlement of Long and Violent Tie-up Found After Day-Long Conference Is Held.

Wharton had agreed to recommend acceptance of the provisions of the adjustment to the employees involved and Rand agreed to recommend acceptance of the terms by the company's directors.

The Labor Board's ruling ordered that new employees be discharged if necessary to take care of the strikers, but Rand said last night that no employees would be discharged under terms of the agreement. The company said last week, however, that its plants already were operating at 100 per cent capacity.

The strikers had demanded that their organization be recognized as the sole bargaining agency for the employees. Asked if this was provided for in the agreement, Rand declined to say, but commented that "we've always recognized the union." The company has plants in New York, Connecticut and Ohio.

Press Aids Conference.

The peace conference was arranged by Secretary Perkins without regard to and before issuance of the Labor Board decision. After her aides had repeatedly met with failure in efforts to reach Rand to invite him to meet the Secretary, Miss Perkins issued an open invitation through the press, and the following day brought a telegram from the company that Rand would be here.

The executive committee of the company, Rand said before leaving for New York last night, will be given the terms of the adjustment to-day and has power to act on them. Wharton said a committee from the Workers Council will meet here today to consider the terms.

Wharton was asked whether the union would withdraw the complaint on which the Labor Board issued its Monday order and ask the board to rescind the order but declined to say what course would be taken.

Abduction Ruins Duck Enterprise At Georgetown U.

Duck Raising in Healy Hall, Georgetown University dormitory, has suffered a serious setback, it was learned yesterday. In fact a brood of young ducks which for the past few days had been enjoying the run of the third floor had been kidnapped. At least they are gone.

Said the Rev. Joseph G. Dwyer, prefect of the corridor, "I appreciate how the boys feel. But after all it might all be for the best. You know ducks."

Members of the duck-owning corporation include Jack Donohoe, of Sioux Falls; Thomas Stokes, of Miami; Elias McQuade, of Lowell, Mass.; Ray Doran, of Danbury, Conn.; Peter Magardino, of Buffalo, and Charles Millwain, of Atlanta.

Baldwin Lawyers Lose Court Move

Huntington, W. Va., March 18 (A.P.)—The defending attorneys for Charles Baldwin, charged with slaying his mother, lost a tactical move today. The testimony that a red stain on Baldwin's pajama coat was not his own blood remained on the court records.

Counsel for the 41-year-old lawyer and former Army captain made a motion to throw out the testimony of two blood test experts. Judge H. Clay Warth overruled the motion and adjourned court for the day.

Sen. Harrison Denies Taxes Will Be Raised

Congress Favors Cutting Costs, He Says; Cites Income Levy Gain.

By the Associated Press.

Chairman Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, of the Senate Finance Committee, who speaks with recognized authority on New Deal fiscal policies, asserted today yesterday taxes would not be increased at the present session of Congress.

He made the statement in a special press conference, intimating that it answered a recent plea by Gov. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board for prompt balancing of the Federal budget, through heavier taxation if necessary.

"God knows, taxes are high enough," the Senator exclaimed. "All the sentiment in Congress is to balance the budget by curtailing expenditures, not by raising taxes."

He described March income tax returns as "gratifying" and hinted that the tax on corporation surpluses, passed by the last Congress, might be modified next year.

Preliminary tabulations by the Treasury showed income tax collections for the first seven days of March totaled $554,948,541, a sharp increase over the same period last year.

Treasury officials, noting many returns were not included in the tabulation, said there was no reason to change their estimate that the month's total collections would reach $840,000,000—more than double last year's figure.

Harrison's statement was challenged quickly by Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, who contended taxes should be hiked to put the Government on a "pay as you go basis."

"We will have to carry this public employment program over a long period," he argued, "and we ought to be taxing as we go. That's been my position since 1930."

Close associates of Eccles said privately yesterday he actually does not consider new levies necessary to balance the budget if Congress holds appropriations within limits set by the President.

Man Who Rescued Woman in Flood Will Marry Her

Mrs. Eva Dell Myers, whose name is news when the Polomac is in flood stage, will be married today to William E. Swainson, who, like Mrs. Myers, is a resident at Glen Echo, Md. The romance, it was said, began last March when the river was on a rampage.

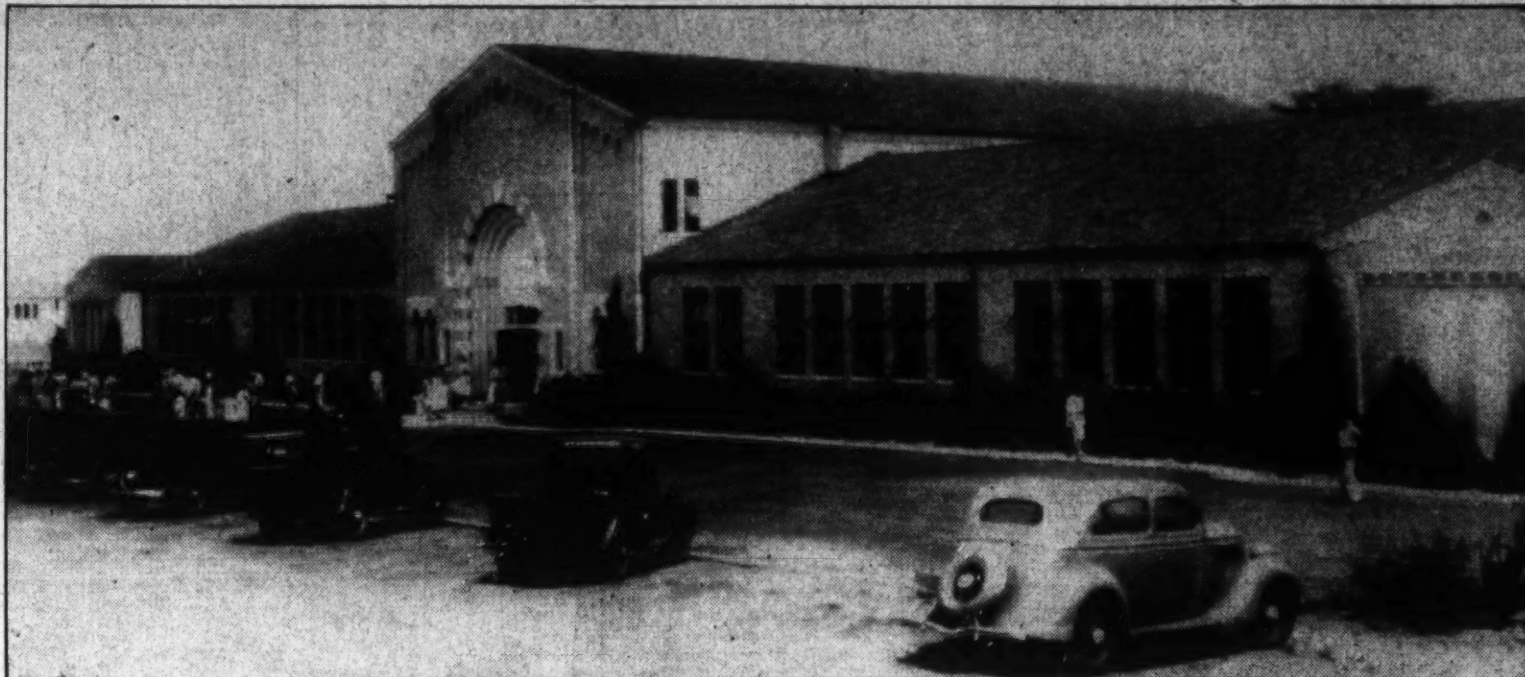

Mrs. Myers lives on an island in the river off Glen Echo. She has twice been rescued from her island home when the river rose. Last year her rescuer was Swainson, who rescued her from the river.

Mrs. Myers is the widow of Lieut. Carl H. Myers, Army aviator killed at Honolulu in 1916. Her fiancé is a trucking contractor.

McReynolds Talk Irks Colored Unit

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, through its secretary, Walter White, yesterday took Supreme Justice James C. McReynolds to task for his use of the word "darky" in his speech before the Phi Delta Theta Fraternity Tuesday night.

"We submit it is highly unbecoming for one occupying so exalted an office as Justice of the United States Supreme Court to indulge in derogatory colloquialisms of this sort which reflect upon one-tenth of our Nation's population," stated White.

"We further submit that such usage is of bad taste and is not indicative of that impartiality which is expected of a Supreme Court Justice."

Bernad, of Minnesota, who told of benefits to be gained through organization of workers; and Arthur Watwood, of Minnesota, Josiah Lyman presided.

Hush-Hush Or Health? One-Fourth of Prison Inmates In D. C. Infected With Syphilis

By Gerald G. Gross.

(This article is one in a series to acquaint citizens with the tragic neglect of the venereal disease problem in the District of Columbia.)

Just a year ago the American Social Hygiene Association reported on its limited survey of venereal disease control in public welfare institutions of the District.

Today the deplorable and, in some instances, sordid conditions recommended for correction still prevail. Only they are one year worse.

If indifference is general to the high incidence of syphilis and gonorrhea among the Capital's free and footloose citizenry, how much easier it is to ignore the affliction of hundreds of men, women and children who are confined legally.

They are in the District penal institutions, the home for feeble-minded, reform schools and the children's receiving home. They are a constant menace to their thousands of uninfected fellows. And upon release they constitute a health hazard to the public because funds for treatment follow-up service are woefully insufficient.

Freed Before Treatment.

Take the man, or woman, who draws a ten-day sentence to Occoquan Workhouse, which had approximately 1,200 inmates yesterday. A blood test for syphilis is taken routinely. As likely as not, by the time the serological report is received from the overtaxed laboratories of the Health Department, where the specimen has been sent, the convict has served out his term and been released.

One in every four persons admitted to Occoquan has syphilis, as shown by the routine blood tests given every inmate. Only those serving sentences of 30 days or longer are put on treatment. This is because "shots" are ineffective, even dangerous, if administered only a few times and then discontinued.

Theoretically, the 10-day inmate whose term expired before his positive blood report, denoting the presence of syphilis, was received from the Health Department is "followed up" by that department so that he will start treatment.

The same—theoretically—applies to all others who leave the workhouse without having received any treatment or upon whom only a start toward cure has been made.

Staff Too Limited.

But the social service staff of the I street social hygiene clinic, consisting of a man and a woman, and the few public health nurses assigned there can not possibly do justice to this type of follow-up work, which is just one of their many duties.

Lorton and Occoquan have only one physician each. If he devoted himself solely to diagnosis and treatment of venereal diseases he would be kept busy. But prisoners also have their tuberculosis, tonsillitis, bone fractures, kidney trouble, etc.

Where the reformatory and workhouse make an heroic attempt to check syphilis and gonorrhea for the sake of the sufferer, the institution and the outside world which eventually will take back the offender, practically nothing is done about it at District Jail.

Last month 43 inmates were treated at the jail for syphilis. This is less than 7 per cent of the average daily census. Compare that with the 25 per cent under treatment at Lor-

Chemist to Head Health Education

Appointment of Melvin Price Isaminger, 30, as director of public health education in the District of Columbia, was announced yesterday by the Commissioners.

Isaminger, formerly professor of hygiene at Oregon State College, will plan and direct a program of public health instruction including the dissemination of new articles, pamphlets and radio talks. He received the degrees of bachelor of arts, master of science, and doctor in public health from the University of Michigan.

Suspect Arrested In Begging Case Forfeits $25 Bond

A man who said he was Arthur Brown, 34, of 1518 Olive street northwest, made two more or less serious mistakes yesterday.

The first was when he tried to panhandle Policeman James L. Mavars of the back inspectors squad. That got him arrested.

Mistake No. 2 occurred immediately afterward at the Police Traffic Bureau where Brown was asked to post $25 collateral on a charge of soliciting alms.

Brown not only dug into his pockets and produced the $25, but elected to forfeit the cash rather than appear in court.

That's bad for business.

It costs over half a million more to make

OVER...half...a...million...dollars! That's how much more it costs each year to make Four Roses the way we make it.

We could change our methods—sure. But if we did, the whiskey we produced wouldn't come close to having the all-round greatness that distinguishes Four Roses.

For it takes not just one, but several superb straight whiskeys to make Four Roses. Each of these whiskeys must be distilled by the matchless—and costly—old-fashioned method. Each must be superlative in some special way—aroma, body, smoothness, flavor.

Blended together, these straight whiskeys (and only straight whiskeys are used!) unite all their virtues in one whiskey which we believe is the finest made...Four Roses!

"But it costs me so little more to buy!"

"My first sip of Four Roses told me I could never again be satisfied with any other whiskey. Then I found I wouldn't have to be—for Four Roses actually costs only a quarter more a pint than the whiskey I'd been drinking."

Brihuega Recaptured on Guadalajara Front; 100 Italians Taken.

By the Associated Press.
Madrid, March 18.—Government forces, making a sudden attack on the Guadalajara front, recaptured the town of Brihuega today, Gen. Jose Miaja reported tonight.

The leader of all government troops in central Spain said his men "fell like an avalanche" on insurgents who had seized Brihuega, 32 miles northeast of Madrid, in their recent drive toward Guadalajara.

Charging with bayonets fixed, the government soldiers drove the insurgents several miles beyond Brihuega, Gen. Miaja said.

The victory report, coming as Spain began her ninth month of civil war, sent morale skyrocketing in Madrid, where government leaders had been insisting only one important victory was needed to convince their men they had power on the offense as well as the defense.

One hundred Italian prisoners were reported captured in the Brihuega fighting. They were said to have been seized by the Garibaldi Brigade, an anti-Fascist Italian unit, which has been in the vanguard of recent government assaults in the Guadalajara region.

A government communique reported the seizure of 60 trucks, 20 machine guns and 10 field guns.

Madrid's defenders also gained ground in University City, the northwestern corner of Madrid, the communique stated. They attacked under heavy artillery fire near the Los Franceses bridge in an effort to cut off the insurgents holding the Clinical Hospital.

Five government mines were exploded under the hospital grounds as government forces moved forward against fortified outposts despite heavy casualties.

Senate Group Approves Federal School Aid Bill

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Labor Committee approved yesterday a bill to provide permanent Federal aid for State and Territorial school systems, with an eventual maximum appropriation of $300,000,000 a year.

The measure was offered by two Southern Democrats, Senators Harrison and Blackburn, of Alabama. It calls for an initial appropriation of $100,000,000, to be increased $50,000,000 annually until a maximum of $300,000,000 is reached in 1942.

Child Labor Act Loses In Connecticut Vote

Hartford, Conn., March 18 (AP).—The Connecticut house of representatives, for the third time since 1925, killed the child labor amendment today.

Boston, March 18 (AP).—Ratification of the Federal child labor amendment suffered an initial setback in the Massachusetts legislature today when the constitutional law committee voted 8 to 2 against ratification.

The committee's vote will bring the bill for ratification of the amendment before the House for debate Tuesday.

Labor Meeting Called To Defend Court Plan

New York, March 18 (AP).—A mass meeting in defense of President Roosevelt's Supreme Court program, with a list of speakers headed by Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin, and Senator Hugo M. Black, of Alabama, was called today by the American Labor Party for Wednesday.

Gustave A. Strebel, the party's executive director, said the meeting, at Carnegie Hall, was called "to clear away the fog of misrepresentation and propaganda advanced by opponents of the President's judiciary program."

Charles Lee Cooke, Social Arbiter, Dies at 72; Famed for Ruling on Dolly Gann Controversy

Former Messenger Boy Dictated to Vice Presidents.

Charles Lee Cooke, one time messenger boy who became arbiter of Washington society, and who for years from his State Department desk told Vice Presidents where they ranked at table as compared to diplomats and Supreme Court justices, died yesterday at 72 of a heart ailment.

Mr. Cooke solved many a weighty problem of precedence since the day he took office in 1919 as the first ceremonial officer of the Capital has ever known. Usually his dicta were obeyed, but occasionally, as in the instance of the famed Dolly Gann controversy, he had his troubles.

At the State Department he was known as "Charlie," despite the dignity of his office. He was the Nation's official greeter to visiting foreign potentates, drafted all the President's messages to foreign dignitaries, and has welcomed many distinguished visitors to Washington with proper etiquette. He had all the fine points of procedure at his fingertips.

Sent to Ethiopia.

He reached the age of retirement not long ago, but by an executive order issued in July 1936, he was retained in active service for another year. Mr. Cooke officiated at the Washington Arms Conference in 1921-1922 and was an aide on a special mission sent to Ethiopia for the crowning of the emperor, Haile Selassie, in 1930.

He was born in Washington in 1865. He will be buried in Baltimore following funeral service here at the Speare Funeral home at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Of him, Secretary Hull said yesterday: "It is with great personal sadness that I inform you of the distinguished ceremonial officer of the Department of State, Mr. Charles Lee Cooke. Nearly 36 of Mr. Cooke's 45 years of Government service have been given to the Department of State, and he was one of the most loyal, efficient and popular officials the department has ever had."

His service has extended far beyond the confines of the Department of State since, as an outstanding authority in this country on social and ceremonial usage and diplomatic precedence, he was constantly being consulted not only by Cabinet officers and other high ranking officials of this Government, but by the members of the foreign diplomatic corps in Washington, who placed great dependence upon his guidance and judgment.

The most vexing problem Mr. Cooke ever had to face was the dispute over the precedence of Dolly Gann, sister of Vice President Charles Curtis, in the spring of 1928. The unmarried Vice President wrote a letter to then Secretary of State Frank Kellogg, stating he wished to have his sister, Mrs. Gann, put on the protocol list as his official hostess in Washington. Mr. Cooke was at once consulted. Never before had a sister of a Vice President been named as his hostess. Could she sit at the head of a table at which the Vice President presided, was the question.

Mr. Cooke studied the problem and ruled that Mrs. Gann could not substitute as a wife in the matter of precedence. His ruling was transmitted by Kellogg, and then the problem flared into a national issue.

Bankhead Hopes For Labor Ruling

By the Associated Press.

Speaker Bankhead expressed hope yesterday for an early Supreme Court decision on cases involving constitutionality of the Wagner labor relations act. The decision is needed to clear up "a very serious economic situation," he said.

Although declining to advance an opinion as to the legality of so-called "sit-down" strikes, the speaker told his press conference the Wagner act was the instrumentality Congress had provided to deal with such situations.

"As soon as the court decides this issue," he said, "it may clarify the situation. We won't know until the court acts whether the Federal Government has any power at all, or whether it must be left to the police power of the States."

Representative Hook (Democrat, of Michigan), told the House that when a labor organization steps into the field of "anarchy" Congress and the Nation should take cognizance.

The situation in Michigan is national in its scope, he said, adding: "Leaders (strike) have gone into private places of business and confiscated the keys."

Eugenics By Law.

In key with the growing concern over venereal disease in Washington, the District health officer has suggested that physical examinations for prospective brides and bridegrooms be considered. From his remarks before two medical groups it is clear that Dr. Ruhland has in mind no legislation to make examinations for syphilis and gonorrhea compulsory. He would prefer to have the public become so aroused over the prevalence and grave social consequences of the diseases that all candidates for marriage would voluntarily submit to examination as a matter of course.

This certainly would be a desirable arrangement. But it is questionable whether it would have any appreciable effect in checking the ravages of the two plagues. For, generally speaking, only those persons who need inspection the least would go to the trouble, to say nothing of the expense, of an examination. On the other hand, the only alternative would appear to be a law to make examinations compulsory and to refuse marriage license to any who showed symptoms of venereal infection.

The first reaction to this proposal is a revulsion at the thought of any further invasion by the State into the private lives of citizens. But the State has long intervened in questions of divorce; the justification here has been that the family is the foundation of modern society and the collapse of even one marriage a matter for public attention. With the same reasoning, why should not society interpose before marriage to make certain that new families will at least begin without physical handicap?

Nine States already have accepted this logic and today boast so-called "eugenic" laws which, if they drive a few persons across borders to be married, in the main offer considerable assurance that future generations will start life free from hideous disease, for the consequences of which society as a whole inevitably pays.

A Study In Contrasts.

The steel and motor industries provide a most instructive study in contrasting methods—a contrast between peaceful cooperation in behalf of collective bargaining and hot-headed warfare to determine the conditions under which collective bargaining shall be carried on. Since the executive heads of the steel industry have a long-established reputation for being implacable foes of independent unionism, the agreements just concluded between representatives of the C. I. O. steel union and several major subsidiaries of the United States Steel Corporation are really notable achievements.

An examination of the terms of these uniform agreements shows that both parties to the contract have made reasonable concessions to secure a mutually beneficial accord. The union, for instance, does not insist that the company recognize it as sole bargaining agency—a demand that has been largely responsible for the present crisis in Detroit. It also agrees not to solicit membership on the company's properties and it makes no demands for the check off of union dues by the employer.

The steel concerns, on the other hand, recognize the seniority rights of the workers in cases of promotion and dismissal—in itself a great protection against discrimination for union activity. Elaborate machinery is likewise set up under the agreements to deal with grievances involving the companies and union members. Since no attempt has been made to distinguish between union and non-union members, all these benefits, as well as the wage increases granted under the contract, will presumably apply to all the workers. Hence, for practical purposes the C. I. O. steel union has become a most effective spokesman for the employees, although it is not accepted as sole bargaining agency.

By securing valuable concessions not only for its own members but for all employees, the steel workers organized under the banner of John L. Lewis have made a promising start. The best way for any union to assure a dependable increase in numbers and in influence is to prove the value of organization to those who are unorganized. Strong unions can be built up by such means into bargaining agencies whose right to speak for the workers as a whole will soon be uncontested.

Stable responsible bargaining agencies are not likely to develop under the strain and stress of industrial warfare. Intimidation of non-union workers by union employees, or of union workers by hostile employers, may succeed in their immediate objective. But settlements reached by such means are not the product of real collective bargaining. They are only a precarious armistice.

Gov. Murphy's Statement.

Gov. Murphy has made a heroic effort to avoid errors of either omission or commission in the exceedingly dangerous situation which the sit-down strikes of automobile workers have precipitated in Michigan. If any criticism is to be made of his attitude it is that in his anxiety to avoid bloodshed he has given tacit encouragement to a definitely revolutionary movement which obviously cannot be allowed to continue unchecked. That leniency, however, gives added force to the statement he made at the opening of his "law and order conference" on Wednesday.

In this statement the Governor squarely confronted the intolerable threat to orderly government contained in the seizure of factories, and their continued occupation after clear-cut judicial rulings on the illegality of this procedure. "We have means to enforce respect for public authority," said the Governor, "and we propose to use them with proper vigor if need be."

Everyone hopes that the resort to force will not be necessary. Everyone hopes that the Chrysler factories will be evacuated peacefully before the legal steps necessitating compliance with Judge Campbell's order have been completed. But if force is necessary, force will have to be used. That possibility must be confronted calmly and without equivocation. Otherwise the eventual settlement will be far more difficult and far more disastrous for the general welfare.

Gov. Murphy attributes to the policies of "backward employers" much of the responsibility for the present excited tactics of the automobile workers union. But he is under no misapprehension as to what is at stake in the present coercive methods of the latter. "When the authority of governmental agencies is continually flouted or defied," he says, "outraged citizens prepare to take the law into their own hands; democratic rule is endangered, and the way is prepared for the rule of mobs or dictators."

On the leaders of the men camped in the Chrysler factories at Detroit rests a greater responsibility than they seem to realize. They have a case, but they are risking the loss of it in the great court of public opinion. And they risk much more than their own case. Present "intolerable conditions," as Gov. Murphy says, will be remedied by "another kind of rule" if the accepted procedure of our form of government cannot be peacefully maintained.

To Cleanse The Potomac.

Every citizen who lives in the Potomac River Basin has reason to be pleased with the progress that is being made toward purification of that historic stream. It is especially gratifying that leadership of this movement has been taken over by the Washington Board of Trade. Too often business groups look askance upon measures to eliminate the pollution of streams, since much of it comes from commercial enterprises. But the local body is conducting an active campaign for improvement of the Potomac, as illustrated by its conference on pollution control to be held today in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building.

Washington's opportunity to free itself from the menace of polluted streams has come with the recommendation of the National Resources Committee that the Potomac Basin be used as a demonstration unit in a national clean-up program for our rivers. As the committee points out, the Potomac is the logical first choice. It is small enough to make experimentation practical. From the viewpoint of the Federal Government it is the most convenient river system for study. Research work in this area has already been extensive.

Moreover, pollution of the Potomac has gone so far as to be intolerable. Because of its sluggish flow below Washington the river is said to be even filthier than the Ohio, although the basin of the latter is far more industrialized. Yet engineers regard the sewage-treatment problems encountered in the Potomac area as typical of those which must be solved throughout the country. All these factors combine to make Washington's river ideal for demonstration purposes.

The National Resources Committee notes the risk of undertaking a national program until concrete results have been attained in some typical area. But there are other reasons for concentration of initial efforts in this region. The Federal Government is particularly interested in and responsible for the disgraceful condition of the Potomac. The inconsistency of using this historic stream as an open sewer has become pronounced with the development of the George Washington Memorial highway and other recreational projects along its banks.

By starting the national anti-pollution program in this region, prompt results leading to early extension of benefits to other valleys may also be expected. A voluntary interstate agreement is already in existence between the States interested in the Potomac—Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and Pennsylvania. It is far simpler to get a program immediately under way with this setup than to launch a pioneer project involving more States between which no agreement exists.

Fortunately, legislation has already been introduced to make this project possible. A bill by Senator Barkley would create a division of water pollution control in the United States Public Health Service, with power to prepare comprehensive plans for improvement of sanitary conditions on navigable streams and their tributaries and to encourage co-operative activities in this field by the States. This carefully devised proposal, based upon recommendations of the National Resources Committee, recognizes the national character of the problem, yet leaves to the States concerned a large measure of control in its solution.

Local groups should throw their full support to an undertaking so full of promise. In doing so they will render an immediate service to the 1,300,000 persons living on the Potomac watershed. And they will also strike a blow against disgusting and increasingly insanitary conditions in every American river system.

Letting The Cat Out.

The disposition of college professors to call a spade a spade is helping to clarify the Supreme Court issue. Both Edward S. Corwin, professor of constitutional law at Princeton, and Dean Leon Green of Northwestern University Law School stripped all pretense and camouflage from the President's judicial program and came out in favor of executive control over the court. Their frankness may be embarrassing to the Administration, but it serves the useful purpose of putting the issue in its proper light.

A year ago Prof. Corwin thought packing the court would be objectionable because the court is already large enough. Presumably this was a deliberate conclusion resulting from many years of study on the subject. Now in the heat of a contest he has changed his mind. In his own opinion he has "lived and learned." But according to the President's theory of declining mental powers it may be difficult for Senators to give more weight to his views at 59 than to his views at 58.

Prof. Corwin's present attitude is noteworthy chiefly because he advocates the appointment of biased justices. Believing that the present membership of the court is prejudiced against legislation extending the Federal power, and that the President has as much right as the Supreme Court to establish his theory of the Constitution, he now sees no objection to packing the court with members favorable to the President's viewpoint. That would be considered sound reasoning in both Italy and Germany. But it is not convincing to those who regard the Supreme Court as an essential balance wheel in our federalized democracy.

The surprising thing about Dean Green's testimony is the candid admission that "the appointment of six new judges to the Supreme Court would be an exercise of political control over the court." Can that statement be related to his coaching by Justice Department officials? The immediate sponsors of the measure have never been frank enough to admit that their purpose is to place the court under the political control of the President.

In still another instance Dean Green played directly into the hands of the opposition. When one department exceeds its authority, he explained, it becomes the duty of the other departments to exercise the checks provided in the Constitution. That, of course, is precisely what the Supreme Court has done. With the courage characteristic of an independent judiciary, it has told the President that some of his new instruments of power for which no sanction can be found in the organic law, will have to be approved by the people before they can be clothed with governmental authority.

If testimony in favor of the judiciary bill continues to follow this trend, the opponents may not consider it necessary to extend their rebuttal over many weeks, as they now plan to do.

Marbles Never Cease.

With March at her most capricious and folk who have faith in the groundhog as a prophet annoying the rest of us with growers of fruit fearing that frost may have ruined their crops; with sit-down strikers, war-mongers and pessimists multiplying daily, it is comforting to realize that there is at least one phase of the youth movement that arouses no criticism anywhere. Marble time approaches.

We get the news, from St. Mary's, W. Va., that two and half million marbles, 18 carats, have just been shipped by a local factory to various distributing points, and that this is merely the small beginning of a big movement. Things begin to look up when the boys knuckle down.

The Sit-Down Strikes.

From The New York Times.
The sit-down strikes in Michigan clearly reveal the dangers of a situation in which power is exercised without responsibility. The United Automobile Workers Union has attempted to use the seizure of the Chrysler Corporation's property as a means of compelling the company to come to terms with it. This has been the whole strategy of the strike which has closed nine plants. But when the leaders of the union are confronted by an order of the court declaring this strategy to be illegal, they say there is nothing they can do about it. "We did not put the men in the plants, and we're not going to take them out." If this is not power exercised without responsibility, it would be hard to find a name for it.

Letters to the Editor

Law By Propaganda?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is well known that most Congressmen will vote against what they know to be the national interest at the behest of any local interest in their district. But I had supposed that on national questions such as neutrality they tried to legislate for the best interests of the country as a whole. It appears, however, that this is doubtful.

The chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs in the hearings on neutrality stated that they did not consider it to be their function to determine a wise policy for the country, but merely to give legislative effect to the propaganda which had been worked up for a

Indiscriminate Brickbats.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was very much touched by Mr. Elderman's cartoon, "The Mohawk Valley Formula," in The Post of March 16.

It was enough to bring one's tears to see that poor contestant entitled "Union Labor," with, of course, nothing but the regulation padding in his gloves, and the most conscientious scruples about fighting fairly, matched against that cruel, heartless employer, with his gloves loaded with all sorts of knockout toys.

And the referee, in the form of the National Labor Relations Board, is so noted for his aggressive impartiality. No one yet seems to have heard of him ever looking into the gloves of the labor contestant, but maybe this is because the record of the latter has been so uniformly free of terrorism, violence, etc., that he considers an investigation useless and unnecessary.

JOHN C. ROGERS.
Alexandria, Va., March 18.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your article, "How To Build Fascism," is a definite threat, not only to collective bargaining, but to the principles of democracy in general. There is a distinction between the ideals of organized labor and the ideals of fascism that you have neglected to mention. Granted that the same conditions exist in America today as existed in Europe prior to the rise of fascism, let us examine the facts.

In September, 1920, the Italian workers began occupation of the factories. On September 3 half a million workers were in control. In the same month a settlement was reached and the workers evacuated the factories for a 20 per cent wage increase and a "promise" of a share of "workers' control in industry." That the promises were broken is history.

In November, 1920, the first Fascist front against the workers was launched at Bologna. Your editorial implies that fascism came into power because the workers entered and took over the factories. This is not true. In my opinion fascism was developed by bourgeois elements in Italy as a species of preventive counter-revolution to prevent the people from gaining control and forming a democratic government. When Mussolini and his followers founded the Fasci di Azione Interventista at Milan in 1919 (before the workers entered the factories) the germ of fascism was born—when the Fascists and their hooligan bands were supported and armed by the authorities they were able to overthrow the Italian government and set up their dictatorship.

The situation in Germany paralleled in many respects the situation in Italy and other pro-Fascist nations. The Brüning dictatorship was established in the summer of 1930, ruling without parliament by an emergency decree, and with the support of Social Democracy. That Germany went over to Hitler was due mainly to the failure of Social Democracy and trade-union leadership to resist Hitler during the formative period of German National Socialism.

The rest is a history of mass executions, racial prejudice, destruction of Christian religion, forced exile for the best intellects of the fatherland, and a return to the pomp and blood-lust of a military machine more ruthless and barbaric than the goose-step era of the Kaiser. Again, we have a dictatorship of the most perverted and reactionary elements—a dictatorship that was not due to organized labor, except that small group of Social Democratic betrayers.

Your editorial sets a dangerous precedent. In spirit you move backward towards fascism, repudiating the democratic principles you formerly supported. Let us remember that Fascist forces are present in America, and if at any time these proponents of fascism are aided by either a Democratic or Republican government we can expect a duplication of the situation in Italy or Germany.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many of us were unpleasantly surprised when we read your editorial, "How To Build Fascism." We feel that your denunciation, instead of serving the purpose for which you intended it, that is, as a warning against fascism, actually was a Fascist attack on organized labor in America. And, may we say respectfully, an attack worthy of the German propaganda department. At loss to defend itself against the outspoken truth of the courageous Fiorella LaGuardia, it heaped epithets upon the American people so vile that a protest was made by the American State Department which had scarcely finished making its abject apologies to the Fascists. The hurling of epithets is the chief trick in the Goebbels propaganda machine. We are sorry that The Post editorial writer descended to the same level in labeling John L. Lewis the "C. I. O. Fuehrer."

What we might have expected in an American paper was an editorial giving full praise and endorsement to the Madison Square Garden meeting at which Lewis spoke against fascism, along with LaGuardia and Gen. Hugh Johnson. Only a few days before we had seen photographs in American papers of swastikas painted upon American synagogues—a foreboding if you please, of Fascist decadence. That single overt act brought home to many of us that America was not immune to the pestilence was spreading overseas, seeking to undermine democracy in the same low ways it had used in its rise to power in Europe.

But there was an even greater reason why many of us heralded the appearance of John L. Lewis at an anti-Fascist meeting. He was speaking for the millions of American people who have the most at stake in the fight against fascism, those in the trade unions and the white collar and professional workers of this country. These millions have not forgotten, even if others have, that this country has not solved its unemployment problem. Simple was it, this importation of duped Italian working men into Gen. Franco's army.

Filthy Burlesque.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some days ago I read a letter in The Post regarding burlesque in Washington and I should like to add my impressions.

Last winter while in Florida I was invited to attend Minsky's in Miami. I had never seen a burlesque so I accepted. What I saw and heard was so disgusting and so revolting that I expected the police to stop the show. The whole performance was appallingly dirty and vulgar. If it had been funny or clever there would have been some excuse for it, but it wasn't funny. It was an exhibition of filth, throughout, bawdy in the extreme, with nothing to relieve it. Even those in the party who were familiar with burlesque were agreed on that. Then, to add further insult, one of the actors (and he was poor, indeed) came forward at the close of the show and said "we hope we have not offended anyone." By that time I was ill with disgust.

Being an ardent lover of the theater, mature enough and sophisticated enough to enjoy plays that require a broad mind, I was intrigued with the idea of attending Minsky's. But what a shock! What utter disgust!

It is difficult for me to believe that decent men make a habit of attending filthy shows like Minsky's. What type of mind does it require?

Perhaps the most appalling thing of all to me is the fact that cities with intelligent (or are they?) men in control will permit such shows to run.

I should like to see Westbrook Pegler expose this sort of thing until it is cleared up.

"Seeds Of Lawlessness."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As was to be expected, the seeds of lawlessness are being sown by the attempt to assassinate by sit-down strikers of District Attorney Buron Fitts of Los Angeles. He did not look upon the pernicious activities of sit-downers as a joke, but had the evildoers hauled into court and indicted, as was his sworn duty to do.

Let us hope the wound in Mr. Fitts' arm will soon heal and he will be able to continue and finish his splendid work and land these law breakers in jail, where they belong. Thereby he may set a fine example for the rest of the country, especially poor, distracted Detroit, Mich., where law-abiding citizens are being harassed by a group of people who are highly taxed to give them protection, is in hiding and Lewis has set himself up as dictator, without let or hindrance.

A Balanced Budget.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This morning after reading the text of Mr. Marriner S. E. E. statement regarding the budget I felt I had heaved a sigh of relief to know that at last someone comes to the front to again remind the people of the United States that an unbalanced budget is a dangerous thing.

To my mind a financially sound Government is by far more important than the wrangling and jangling of politicians. What good will our apparent economic recovery do us if we jeopardize the credit of our Government? There is no time to waste something must be done about it now.

"Why Elect Representatives?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A threat is an unwise, stupid mode of attempted coercion. Such a threat, as made today by James A. Farley, to all and any Democrats who dared vote against Mr. Roosevelt in his scheme to pack the Supreme Court, is a case in point. Such tactics must certainly cause our Senators and Congressmen to assert their rights of freedom of thought and speech.

If, as Farley says, they must vote as Mr. Roosevelt or one of his henchmen orders, then why send our representatives to Washington? It is futile to do so, if they must be only rubber stamps and forced to vote as ordered—or lose their political heads. It is the constituents of these men who will decide their fate at the next election, not Mr. James A. Farley.

T. H. Benton's Double Task

MISSOURI'S Thomas Hart

Benton has had to perform a double task in painting the murals in the State Capitol at Jefferson City: first he had to do the actual painting; then he had to defend what he had done. The painting has been completed, but the argument rages on. Where, ask the aggrieved critics, is the placid idealism that is wont to characterize the decorations on public buildings? This man Benton has ignored it. Where are the personages that the State strives to get associated with itself—Pershing, for example, and the early Thomas Benton? In their stead, the artist has painted a gigantic something of slaughterhouses and saloon bars, stenographers and carpenters at work, backwoodsmen and city workers.

To this chorus Mr. Benton himself has now undertaken to reply. "Only through the behavior of people can a social history be shown," he asserts. And that was what he originally intended to show and what the Missouri Legislature had commissioned him to show—the social history of the State. Frankie and Johnny, Huckleberry Finn, even a Missouri mule, he decided, had more of a place in that history than Pershing, who did his chief work outside of and unconnected with the State. The James boys, the lead miners, the beer makers were real and vital parts of Missouri history. The slums of St. Louis or Kansas City, and the small town church social, were part of it. Thus Benton.

His critics should have expected such an answer to them. For a number of years, now, Thomas Benton has been one of the leaders of the rising band of native American artists. His use of the prize-fighter and saloonkeeper as subjects for modern murals reached the grand scale when he undertook some such work for the New York School for Social Research, the Whitney Museum of Modern Art and the Indiana State exhibition at the 1933-34 Chicago Fair. That is the sort of art for which he has earned a rising fame—that he has rolled up his sleeves and pitched in to work shoulder to shoulder with the average man. That is the kind of art he has given Missouri—a mural history which should grow in value as the consciousness of the new native art grows.

Lobster And Crayfish.

The Maine fishermen who specialize in lobsters are rising to protest against the Florida crayfish. The authority for this statement is Commissioner Rodney E. Feyler, chief of Maine's Department of Sea and Shore Fisheries. Mr. Feyler reports that his office is swamped with letters complaining that the crayfish, alias the spiny lobster, is masquerading in Northern markets under the name of his cousin from Maine, king of the whole realm of Crustacea. The Florida plebeian will fetch little more than what it costs to get the gentleman from Maine.

No one who has seen Homarus americanus would confuse him with the Southern variety. He ranges all the way from Labrador to Honduras. Millions know and esteem him as the sea's most succulent gift to man. Order him broiled or boiled and it becomes impossible for the cook to substitute Panulirus argus, which is what science calls the crayfish. Panulirus has no great pincer claws like Homarus and his spiked armor and antennae put him in a class by himself. But Panulirus has excellent meat in his tail which could be palmed off in lobster newburg or in any of those concoctions that call for lobster mingled with other shellfish.

What the lobster boys of Maine are going to do about this Florida competition nobody knows, not even Mr. Feyler. There is talk of agitating for labels, but labels will never reach the diner unless he takes his lobster straight and eschews the mixed dish. Perhaps the most rational suggestion is prohibit the catching of Homarus americanus until its race is replenished and he becomes scarce in such quantities as to lower the price and so repel the tide of invasion from South. That we may suppose would be equally unwelcome to the fishermen and to the consumer. Perhaps there is a ray of hope for Maine the fact that the crayfish is diminishing in numbers. If he becomes extinct Maine would not regret him.

A Benefit Of War.

In a recent interview abroad, Viscount Astor, husband of American-born Lady Astor, M. P., cited an interesting fact.

Under the auspices of the League of Nations, a group of nutrition experts has been endeavoring to get countries to devote more care to the important matter of proper food for their young.

"In some countries where we cannot get interest in nutrition on the ground of child welfare," maintains Lord Astor, "we find it aroused by the need for stronger recruits for the army."

Income Tax Amendment.

ACCORDING to the best figures to be had in Washington, there are now 4,801,000 employees of the States, counties and municipalities, drawing more than three billion dollars a year, who don't have to pay a cent of Federal income tax on their salaries or even make out a return.

There are also about 1,500,000 Federal employees who are exempt from the State income tax, if any, in the States where they reside. A lot of Federal employees who live across the State line in Virginia and work in Washington thus escape a State tax which is borne by people in private pursuits who in some cases make less money than the guests of the community.

These exemptions are protected by a series of Supreme Court decisions, the latest of which came down Monday, holding that the Government cannot tax a State or vice versa. That is something obviously cockeyed about all this, because the income tax amendment says Congress may collect taxes on income from whatever source derived.

I HESITATE to hang out my shingle as a constitutional expert, because the field is overcrowded, but I can read short and simple words and that amendment doesn't make any exception for salaries drawn out of the public treasury.

It says "incomes from whatever source derived," and the Supreme Court has created an exception which exempts a class of employed citizens three times as great numerically as the class which now carries the entire burden of the Federal income tax. The whole income tax situation, Federal and State, is now a dizzy confusion, but the Federal rests in an ancient and fine-drawn decision given more than a hundred years ago which didn't foresee the income tax at all and dealt with an entirely different sort of case.

The succeeding courts have used this as a precedent to deny the plain language of a constitutional amendment and throw the weight of the income tax on less than two million people to the profit of the public employees, many of them utterly useless political parasites drawing high salaries met from taxes.

MOREOVER, there are many mendacious States, always around with the tin cup to cage money out of the national Treasury in loans which never will be repaid, which have refused to adopt State income taxes of their own.

If they had State income taxes they would not need to prey so heavily on the Government, and these permanent borrowings represent, in effect, precisely the menace which the Supreme Court undertook to thwart when it pointed out that the States must not be allowed to devour one another.

New York, for example, has a heavy income tax, while Illinois has none, so New York makes an effort to pay her way, while Illinois, in case of trouble, simply rattles the cup.

Yet there has been so much sentiment about the great emergency that the Federal money is shovelled out to relieve distress in States which could meet or, anyway, make a better showing with their local problems, if they had their own income tax.

The Southern States have been the most persistent and successful panhandlers, but sovereign State rights are NOT mentioned when one State dips into the Treasury for a disproportionate grab at money derived from all sources.

IT DOESN'T FOLLOW, however, that a younger bench would take a different view of the income tax exemptions. On the contrary, a court packed by the New Deal might feel a debt of gratitude toward the Administration and affirm the findings of the nine old men so anxious to let the State income taxes, the politicians and politico-technical experts sent out by the national Government to administer various benevolent works of the Government.

A contrary decision might be construed as interference with the aims of the New Deal; and you can imagine what feelings would be hurt by that. Gradually and steadily government is throwing up the sponge and delegating its troubles, though none of its right, to the Nation and, in a measure, to the superior members of the great sisterhood.

Plight Of Agricultural Workers Found Far From Happy In Land Where Stakhanovism Is Pointing Toward Denial Of Communism.

By Violet Conolly.

Special Correspondence of The Post.
This is the second of two articles describing conditions in the U. S. S. R. today.

IF, AS WORKERS, the Russians have been pampered since the Soviet revolution with social insurance measures and their quite unjustifiable domination of other elements of society, they are "exploited" right and left, owing to the high prices and low standards of Soviet industrial production. This is the other side to the complacent Soviet slogan: "We have eliminated the exploitation of man by man. We have destroyed private industry and trade."

There are no landowners or merchants and no competition in this country. I was recently in Odessa where the temperature was far below zero. There was not a warm stocking or glove in the town and hadn't been for weeks, though the shop windows were full of bathing costumes. This is a good example of what is known in Russia as the "compulsory assortment."

Whatever the material conditions, however, the Soviet workers enjoy a peculiar prestige inaccessible to the outside of Russia. They are definitely in the limelight. Photographs of record-breaking coal miners or metallurgical workers and so on get the same publicity in the Soviet press as our social celebrities. These workers are now decorated with the "Order of Lenin," "The Order of Labor," the "Order of the Red Star," as distinguished citizens or diplomats are decorated elsewhere.

If they are Stakhanovites of important party workers they may be sent at the expense of their trade unions to rest in palatial sanatoria in the Crimea, the Black Sea Riviera or the Caucasus, but though they no longer dominate the management of the big Soviet enterprises, their ego is fed through the factory mural news sheet where they can merely comment on the personnel of the

In describing the Stakhanovite movement, Stalin declared that it was a milestone on the way from socialism to communism. How can this be so? The whole driving force of the movement is an appeal to the acquisitive instincts by the provision of tempting monetary rewards for better work. This is largely responsible for the ever-increasing differences in the standard of living between the new classes now forming in the Soviet Union. On the face of it there is nothing of the spirit of communism here at all. And another revolution will be necessary if the Communist system is contemplated in the U. S. S. R.

Third-Class Travelers Talk Vague Banalities.

I SPENT a month recently in Russian trains between Moscow and Erivan, talking for hours on end to the third-class passengers. Relations between Russians and foreigners are now almost confined to the official world so I took to the trains for conversation. I had traveled widely in Russia before but I was amazed at the psychological changes which had taken place in these people. They are still the most kindly traveling companions in the world, but intellectually, how self-complacent, how banal.

Apart from the many ramifications of the five-year plan and the superiority of the Soviet Union to the rest of the world, the range of conversation is very limited. Items of absorbing interest like the big political trials are never discussed publicly nor is there any gossip about the government chiefs such as might be heard in any other country. Whatever their business, they all throw their bouquet to Stalin, their "leader, own father and friend."

None of my companions had been abroad but they only smiled knowingly when I tried in vain to explode their ridiculous ideas of life in many foreign countries. "We are happy. We are free (with a dark look at me). Life is getting better and gayer here." They cried bursting with optimism and freedom.

Nor did I cut any ice when I pointed out that I seemed at least as free as they, having come to the country freely, while foreign travel is only possible for them on "Komandirovka" for the government. No, I came from a world of unemployment and social injustice. That overshadowed everything else including freedom of movement, my clothes, luggage, etc., which they examined minutely and agreed were far better than they could buy for five times the same price.

World Unemployment A Russian Talking Point.

THE COINCIDENCE of world unemployment with the boom in all fields of construction in the U. S. S. R. following the five-year plan, has been a major stroke of luck for the revolution. An ebb must sometime come in this frenzied construction of today, however Russia may develop its planning technique, bringing more or less unemployment in its wake. But that time is still far away and the Soviet worker can confidently reckon the absence of permanent unemployment among his blessings.

Proposals For Party Realignment.

IN A NUMBER of recent articles Mr. Mark Sullivan, a Republican of long and unquestionable party standing, has discussed in compelling, if unflattering terms the very minor nature of the part which the Republican Party can hope to play in the present constitutional crisis. After pointing out the pitifully feeble political representation of the Republican Party in Congress and in the various State governments, he comes directly to the brutal fact that if the President's proposal to pack the Supreme Court with his own appointees is to be beaten, it will have to be beaten by the Democrats themselves. The cold arithmetic of the situation is that there are only 16 Republicans in the Senate and that if a majority against the proposal is to be obtained the Democrats must supply at least double that number.

This consideration leads then to Mr. Sullivan's interesting and important suggestion that the Republican leadership make it known that in the 1938 election, to quote Mr. Sullivan, that "for next year at least and possibly also for the year 1940 it will cease to function as a party and will unite with the anti-New Deal wing of the Democratic Party, forming perhaps a new party under the name 'Constitutional Democrats.'"

THE DECISION urged by Mr. Sullivan would, of course, mark the end of the Republican Party as a national political organization. The interesting thing is that the suggestion instead of being received with outbursts of die-hard Republican wrath would appear to have struck a responsive chord in many Republican breasts. Mr. Sullivan is not being held up to scorn as a traitor to the party with which he has so long been identified. On the contrary, there seems to be a fairly widespread thought that perhaps this is the way that things will eventually work out and that perhaps such an outcome would be for the good of all concerned.

On the other side of the political fence there are some indications that the time for such a juncture of political groups may be near at hand. The essential split between the New Dealers and the old line Democrats, both liberal and conservative, has long been apparent to the most casual observer, as has the unreality of the distinction between the Democratic and Republican Parties. The Supreme Court issue is merely making apparent in political terms what has long been recognized to be an underlying political condition. It is not surprising, therefore, to find Mr. David Lawrence, an anti-New Deal Democrat, proposing the same course of action for the Republican Party as that urged by Mr. Sullivan, at about the same time and in much the same words.

There would appear to be but one important hitch to the execution of this plan. Which side should speak for the Republican Party? Gov. Landon has succeeded Mr. Hoover as titular head of the party, but the decision is not in his hands. No more is it in the hands of Mr. Hamilton, the party chairman, or the Republican National Committee.

PROPERLY SPEAKING, the Republican Party, like the Democratic Party, is not a single national party—it is a coalition of 48 different State parties which are largely autonomous. It speaks as a unit only in the national organization, the Republican National Committee, has no power of itself to bind the party or the State organizations.

Therefore, for individual State organizations to act in the sense suggested by Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Lawrence would be to support pro-courtesy Democratic senators for renomination and rejection in 1938—would be one thing, whereas for Gov. Landon or Mr. Hamilton to make such a pledge in the name of the party would be an entirely different matter, since their pledge, even if given, could be fulfilled only by the action of the party's own voters.

It has been competently reckoned that the price paid to the grain producer is only twice the pre-war level, while the consumer's price for bread is 15 times higher. Industrial goods are now at least 15 to 20 per cent above pre-war prices. This explains the miserable aspect of so many villagers throughout the country and even of the peasants in the Moscow city markets. A collectivized farm in the Soviet Union looks pretty much as the old village from which it was formed. It is only in the state farms that the peasants are induced to lead a communal life in large barracks-like buildings. In the collectivized peasants retain their old homes and a quarter hectare of gardens. They can keep a cow and fowls for their own use, if they can collect enough surplus grain and fodder to feed them. This is often not possible.

The big changes are in the fields, where the high-powered tractors are at work, and in the village schools, clubs, medical centers introduced by the Soviet government. The Soviet government rigidly withholds all information regarding peasant incomes, the consumption of grain or agricultural prices, so a great deal of indispensable material is lacking regarding the precise state of affairs in the Russian countryside today.

Nowhere has Soviet propaganda succeeded in investing its subject with such magic as in the camera studies of Soviet peasants found in such picture books as "U. S. S. R. in Construction," "L'Armee Sovietique," etc. I have seen hundreds of typical peasants in the Soviet Union, along the country roads, waiting for trains in stations, and in the various peasant markets. This poorly clad, drab, unkempt humanity in no way resembles these magnificent camera specimens decked out in picturesque peasant costumes now rarely seen in Russia outside the theater or the museum.

Unusual Foods.

AFTER WRITING about eating woodchucks, in connection with a discussion of Groundhog Day, I began to think of other things not served regularly at the best hotels or in the hearts of the aristocrats, but which, for that very reason, have an exotic interest for those who do not eat them, with an equally exotic flavor for those who do.

Now, I myself have never intentionally eaten snake sandwiches, but I have just received a press dispatch from San Antonio, Tex., which says: "Cooked rattlesnake meat in toasted patties was served by Witte Memorial Museum here to attract visitors on the opening day of the reptile garden."

I don't see why that is not just as much news as the man biting the dog.

I used to wonder how John the Baptist got along on his menu of locusts and honey. I could understand the honey, but the locusts seemed unpalatable, though I knew John the Baptist was not an epicure. Well, I have learned that in many places of the East today locusts are quite generally eaten. They make club sandwiches out of them.

When I was a small boy in Hartford, I was out shooting in the snow-covered fields with some of my playmates, and we got very hungry. Game was scarce, so I shot about a dozen English sparrows, and we cooked and ate them "on the premises." We were so hungry that they tasted good. For the finest professional cook in the world cannot give a flavor to food like that of extreme hunger.

The French people understand both good food and the art of preparing it better than most foreigners. But during the siege of Paris, immediately after the war of 1870, the most particular gastronomers and the most famous Parisian ladies ate rats and mice with avidity. And they knew what they were eating. A book could have been written, "Eat Rats and Mice."

Grover Cleveland

Former Secretary Extolls Integrity Of Democratic President, Finding Greatest Monument To Him In His Influence On Nation.

By Robert Lincoln O'Brien.

Following are excerpts from an address delivered yesterday, the centenary of the birth of Grover Cleveland, on the occasion of the unveiling of his bust for the Hall of Fame at New York University.

FORTY-FIVE YEARS AGO, while waiting to meet Mr. Cleveland for the first time, as he came trudging down the gravel pathway of his country house at Buzzards Bay, the man who was about to introduce me remarked: "There is the man who puts on the fewest lugs of anybody who has ever been President of the United States, and the one man of them all most everlastingly on the level."

Here was a man who believed in a simple, inexpensive government, interfering as little as possible with the lives of its people and subjecting them to the lightest of taxation's burdens. He was as well convinced of the essential wisdom of the free trade philosophy as any man in our public life, even though, like most other Americans, he would have fought shy of the term "free trader." He was avowedly a low tariff and went the energies of his life in that direction.

He believed in the gold standard, perhaps leaning over backwards in his veto of the bill to coin silver. Cleveland was a man of his sound money friends had supported as an amiable gesture, after his great fight against silver coinage had been won. He believed in his spirited sending of troops into Chicago to move the United States mail cars, over the protests of many Governors, and in his determination to such an assertion of Federal authority.

He was the deadliest foe imaginable of extravagance in Government operations and steadily up for their sins on this score. A billion dollar Congress, or that amount of Federal expenditures in two years, was the subject of his persistent extravagance under Theodore Roosevelt as his chief reason for supporting Alton B. Parker in 1904, and Mr. Cleveland was a civil service reformer because he saw in the movement greater efficiency in the public service.

He opposed the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands and became an ardent anti-imperialist in 1898. His one possible deviation from that philosophy came in reference to Cuba which he regarded as an essential part of the American continent destined ultimately to be so recognized. But he opposed the Spanish war and kept this country out of it, so long as he remained in the White House. He took a robust view of the Monroe Doctrine, emphasizing in his Venezuela message a certain paramountcy of the United States in this hemisphere.

Views Reflected 'Old Republic.'

IN FINE, he represented the point of view of the old Republic. Although he may not have read Herbert Spencer, his view of the part that government should take in the life of the nation was essentially the same.

Let me read an illustrative quotation from one of Mr. Cleveland's papers: "The Government is not an almoner of gifts among the people, but an instrumentality by which the people's affairs should be conducted upon business principles regulated by the public needs."

If one looks over the public utterances of the numerous veto Grover Cleveland, notably when Governor of New York his veto of the bill reducing the fares of the Manhattan Elevated on the workingmen's train, one wonders that he received any votes at all rather than that he was ever defeated for office. One wonders what were the sources of his strength disclosed in successive elections and in the tremendous majority which he received in 1892, carrying States like Illinois and Wisconsin that had not been in the party's column since the Civil War, as well as splitting the electoral vote in Ohio and Michigan. His successes bear evidence to an appreciation on the part of the countryman of the man of principle, vigor of utterance, and decisiveness of action.

Cleveland Rejected Strategy Of Leader.

IN OTHER PLACES I have told of the leader of the campaign headquarters in 1892 who prepared a letter of sympathy for Mr. Cleveland to copy, and mail to his bitterest political opponent in New York State, likely to be pivotal in the then pending contest. This was a device for winning the enemy's potent and much-coveted support. I passed this material on to Mr. Cleveland, and read it all. His sole observation was: "I'll see myself in hell first." He put the same idea in more diplomatic language to this campaign manager, for I saw a reply in which the latter said: "You may be right. Time will have to tell. But it seems to me a serious error of judgment." But if such straightforward directness was an error of judgment, it was of the kind that Grover Cleveland was constantly making.

I remember one day when an influential Senator was standing at the door of his office in the White House, to make a last plea in behalf of his candidate for an important office, when the Associated Press flimsies began to circulate which showed that a rival aspirant had been chosen. The Senator, awkwardly projecting himself into the presence of the Chief Executive said: "Mr. President, it doesn't seem to do me any good to come up to see you, and I do not know as I shall ever come again."

Pouring no oil on the wound, the President simply said: "Senator, do just exactly as you please about that."

If these anecdotes give the impression that Mr. Cleveland was cold and disagreeable, they do him wrong. He was one of the most kindly and amiable men in the world, and one of the most free of his way to carry favor. He did not belong to any fraternal orders. He was not a joiner. He was an individualist. He believed what he believed and let it go at that.

Faith In Mankind Shown By Anecdote.

I SUGGESTED to him one day that I should send by check the small sum which he occasionally transmitted by folding the bill directly into his letter. He dismissed the risk of theft in the mails by saying he thought the danger greatly exaggerated; that he sent open money to his mother every month through many years and in no instance had any ever gone astray.

Blum Support Intact as Strike Ends in Paris

Half-Day Demonstration Against Fascism Is Held Peacefully.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 18.—Fear of turmoil over the bloody Clichy riots was allayed tonight as 2,000,000 workers peacefully ended a paralyzing, half-day general strike and the Popular Front government emerged from the crisis with its support intact.

The wheels of Paris literally stopped turning during the morning when the workers laid down their tools to protest against "Fascist assassins" and to demonstrate the strength they wield to enforce their demands that "Fascism" be dissolved in France.

The excitement abated, however, when the strike gradually ended about mid-day. Tension had been high since Tuesday night when Communists and police battled in the streets of suburban Clichy. Alarm that the government might fall in the violent struggle between Right and Left wings seemed allayed when the announcement that Premier Leon Blum's coalition had reaffirmed its support.

Censure Expected.

The government, it generally was believed, would be caustically censured in parliament for the rioting in which five persons died and about 300 were injured but would face no threat to its majority.

Transport in Paris was stopped during the strike. Factories and offices and banks came to a complete standstill.

Strikers paraded through the streets and collected in groups. Police, holding back in most instances, dispersed the throngs where they feared violence might flare.

The city resumed its activities during the afternoon, at first haltingly and then more smoothly. Soon after noon buses and taxis reappeared, subways started running and the streets were massed with workers returning to their jobs. About a million workers in the capital and another million in its outlying districts joined the walk-out. The General Confederation of Labor declared, effectively tying up all work.

Session Postponed.

The paralysis was so complete that a session of the Chamber of Deputies was postponed because its members could not get transportation.

The nearest approach to violence was at the Bourse where brokers and clerks massed on the steps behind an iron grill and shouted epithets at Communists outside.

Communists answered with their clenched fists first salute and the "international," but the swift action of police and the reappearance of traffic in the streets quelled the disorder after a few fist fights.

One woman was arrested for taunting the guards with cries of "assassins! assassins!"

Several thousand strikers attacked a meeting in front of the Clichy Town Hall, scene of the first outbreak, to protest the killings.

But in most other sections, strikers and non-strikers alike made a good-humored holiday of the walkout.

Bob Burns Says

Copyright, 1937

By Bob Burns.

The other day I was standin' on the corner here in Hollywood feelin' kinda lonesome when I saw two fellas meet each other like long-lost brothers. One of 'em says "I hear you're doin' swell and I sure am happy about you." The other one says, "Well, I was doin' all right, but I had a bad break last week and I was just hopin' I would run into you because you're the only one I know to go to for a little help."

Well, sir, the smile froze on the other fella's face. A frosty look came in his eye. It turned out to be just another one of them cases where a friend's heart closed up like a clam when he was asked to open his pocketbook.

It was like an old miser down home that lost his brother out of time. This old miser just cried and moaned and when his friends tried to console him, he says, "I know, but there was the finest brother that ever lived. Although I've known for years that he was starvin' to death, not once did he ever ask me for a cent."

THE FEDERAL DIARY

By Scott Hart.

Lucrifer.

The gal who sings she waits plenty of money and you might want to marry Uncle Sam, considering the way he's slinging the lucrifer these days. As the Nation's paymaster, the Treasury issued $3,735,746 checks in 1936, a swell increase over the 28,509,924 issue of 1935.

Chief Disbursing Officer Guy F. Allen says that to make these payments, it will be about $2,000,000, or nearly 6 cents a check.

Agriculture Lodge, 31, A. F. G. E., is asking support for "the nation's workable, desirable and much needed. Its provisions, briefly, are: When vacancies occur within the department, it will be mandatory that they be filled from within the personnel by promotion, whenever possible. . . . The promotion, would be on the basis of seniority, efficiency and ability. . . . Further, those employed in the department would, under the department, be given every opportunity to learn of the vacancies before new people are recruited from the Civil Service Commission. . . . That in addition to the personnel, a departmental transfer agency be set up to facilitate the workings of the agreement and also to assist in the adjustment of personnel problems."

Pleasant-voiced Harvey Boltwood, native of Denver, Colo., and 27, was appointed director of the Service Bureau of I. C. C., succeeding William P. Bartel, who has been appointed secretary. Boltwood yesterday hesitated when asked for some interesting sidelights about himself. . . . The net result of questioning was that he once was with the United States Railroad Administration, back in the World War period. . . .

Uncle Sam, as a landlord, found business picking up during February. . . . The tenants came through better, and pleased, the landlord issued a special statement about it. . . . Rental collections from occupants of Resettlement communities during the month totaled $93.40 of every $100 due as compared to $92.10 the preceding month. This improvement in the total collections added to receipts of the United States Treasury to $287,694.35. . . . As of February 10, last figures available, the total amount of R. A. from its communities occupants— from the beginning of its activities of May 15, 1935, through February 28, 1937, was $307,699.50.

The condition of Civil Service Commission appointment at close of business Monday showed in the quotas filled list: District of Columbia, entitled, 177, 177; Maryland, entitled, 325, received, 1840; Virginia, entitled, 779, received, 1,940. . . . Eight other States were exceeding their quotas and 38 States, Puerto Rico, Hawaii and Alaska were in arrears.

Introducing Jackson Chequahat, an aged Menominee Indian, who has rated a full page and picture in "Indian Affairs publication. . . . Aside from having been a good fellow, the chief's claim to fame is a little black book he carries in a beaded buckskin pouch. . . . Originally owned by his grandfather, Tah-tah-nay, the book contains a letter written by Laurent Solomons Jumeau, one of the early settlers of Wisconsin and first mayor of Milwaukee. . . . The chief, who wears a full tribal costume that's envied by a flower-picking reveler, says: "Great white man gave book to my grandfather and wrote this. My grandfather gave it to his son, who gave it to me. Soon I will give it to my grandson. So, you see, what may the chief is assuring a library for his posterity."

A moment ago, spoke of Harvey Boltwood, somewhat to the neglect of William P. Bartel. . . . So meet Bartel: He was born at La-Crosse, Wis., January 25, 1886; attended La-Crosse schools and in 1902 came to Washington as a clerk in the National Museum. . . . He entered the service of I. C. C. May 2, 1906, as a clerk in what is now the Bureau of Informal Cases. . . . Subsequently, he was assistant chief examiner, secretary and examiner in the offices of Commissioner Clark, Anderson and Aitchison. . . . Later he was assistant director of the Bureau of Service, then director.

House Group To Broaden D. C. Inquiry

Study of Fiscal Relations to Include Efficiency and Economy.

City Behind in Procedure and Administration, Jacobs Says.

By James D. Secrest.

A sub-committee of the House District Committee will tackle the problem of reorganization of the District government to effect greater efficiency and economy, it was indicated yesterday, in connection with a continued inquiry of fiscal relations and local taxation.

This change in procedure will be recommended to the committee at its next meeting by Representatives Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, and Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, when they ask that the two sub-committees named to study the Jacobs report be dissolved.

Hearings in which George McAneny, chairman of the President's advisory committee, and J. L. Jacobs, director of the fiscal relations study, were the sole witnesses, were adjourned abruptly at noon yesterday after only two sessions had been held with but a few members of the two sub-committees and a handful of Washington citizens present.

Dissolve Committees.

With only the surface of the problem touched, Nichols, who was the only member present yesterday, said he would ask Chairman Mary T. Norton to dissolve the two sub-committees on the ground the legislative phase of the report were so interrelated that separate inquiries would be impractical.

He said he would suggest that a new sub-committee be appointed with Kennedy as chairman. Hearings will be resumed within a week, he predicted, with civic organizations and District officials invited to testify.

Later in the day Kennedy expressed belief the two sub-committees should have the Jacobs report legislative recommendations drafted into bills before the inquiry is resumed. He also proposed that the investigation be broadened to include proposals for reorganizing the local government.

Roberts May Aid.

He intimated that William A. Roberts, former people's counsel, may be hired to aid the sub-committee, and that the report prepared by Roberts, Auditor Daniel J. Donovan and former Budget Director Lewis A. Douglas for the Senate District Committee may be used as a basis for study.

Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, some weeks ago proposed such a study and asked the Senate Audit and Control Committee for $100,000 to finance it. So far, however, the latter committee has not taken any action available and members of the Senate District Committee have been concerned in the Supreme Court controversy.

A special committee of Washington citizens is engaged in a study of ways and means of improving the efficiency of the District government. The House sub-committee probably will call upon it for advice also, it was indicated, once the inquiry gets under way.

"Large Spread."

The question of District government efficiency and economy was injected into the hearing yesterday by Representative Nichols, who Jacobs had stated the investigators found "a very large spread" between the cost of operating the District government and the services received by the taxpayers.

"The District hasn't kept pace with many cities of the country," he said, "in governmental administration and procedure."

He declined to answer a direct question by Nichols as to whether present local revenue would be sufficient to meet District needs if the government were placed upon an efficient basis, but he intimated that drastic economies might be effected.

Both Jacobs and McAneny argued with emphasis against any Federal appropriation for the District over and above the amount to be derived from the three-point fiscal formula, which would produce $2,533,000 in the 1938 supply bill.

Jacobs said he had been misunderstood with regard to his testimony Wednesday afternoon on the Federal holdings in the District. He said he had not testified that a District tax on the Federal property, after it had been valued according to his plan of eliminating parks, monuments and "monumental improvements," would produce only $800,000.

His investigators, he said, had never made an appraisal on this basis, and he said he had referred to another calculation. He did state, however, that the tax would be substantially less than the $2,533,000 proposed under the three-point formula.

Citizens to Study Proposal.

The citizens' committee named by the Commissioners to study means of increasing the efficiency of the local government yesterday voted to study the proposal to place all District government employees under civil service. E. Barrett Prettyman, former corporation counsel and chairman of the citizens' committee, indicated he favored civil service status for all District government workers.

The District Commissioners will be asked to add three more citizens to their 18-man committee in order that a subcommittee on social welfare and relief problems could be named, Prettyman said.

City in New Hampshire Names Frank Burke to Head Police

Former Assistant Chief Here Assumes Nashua Duties Monday.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Nashua, N. H., March 18.—Frank S. W. Burke, retired inspector and chief of detectives of the Washington Police Department, today accepted the post as chief of police in this city, second in size in the State. He will assume his duties Monday.

The force of about 40 men is to be reorganized. Burke's acceptance was sent the chairman of the board of aldermen in a telegram late today. The present chief of the department here has been under suspension for a month.

Since his retirement more than a year ago because of ill health, Burke has been in the real estate business. Recently he completed a course in the real estate school of Southern University.

Inspector Burke often has been characterized as the "ideal policeman" by his associates on the force, which he joined in 1902.

As a youth in age of those high blue hats that marked the policeman of yesterday, he patrolled a beat in Georgetown.

He rose steadily through the non-commissioned grades, and in 1931 he became assistant chief of police. Besides untravelling numerous crimes which had baffled the District, he reorganized the police school here, lengthening the term and making the school more efficient.

As head of the Detective Bureau he directed the solving of many crimes, including the sensational break-up of the Tri-State gang, the capture of the Rhode Island Avenue Bank robbers and the solution of the Milie Henry murder.

Report Meeting Is Slated Today For Symphony

Kindler Warns Orchestras Are Waiting to Employ Men if Goal Fails.

With the National Symphony Orchestra's campaign for a $110,000 sustaining fund near the half-way mark, workers anxiously awaited today's report meeting for the final check-up of the drive.

A total of $52,542.29 was reported at the last luncheon.

Warned that the National Symphony must have the entire amount of the goal to meet its minimum requirements next year, the volunteers who have been in the field for a week speeded up their drive yesterday.

Hans Kindler, founder-conductor of the orchestra, declared in a statement to workers that the future of the orchestra cannot be assured until the $110,000 is raised.

"Many orchestras in the country are watching us, knowing our standard, and are ready to pick our best men, as they have done before," said Dr. Kindler. "If our best men are taken we go backward, we have to start over, not knowing whether we can get as good men; and even if we do, it takes months to have these men played in."

The conductor said it was imperative to provide means for paying his 80 musicians better salaries.

Students Plead for Renewal Of G. W. Professor's Contract

A petition containing 171 signatures, asking that the contract of Marvin Herrick, professor of English at George Washington University, be renewed, was read before the student council at George Washington last night. His contract expires in June.

Reading of the petition, however, did not occur in the presence of Dr. Cloyd H. Marvin, president of the university. It was introduced to the student group before the executive appeared.

Names signed to the petition included students who have taken advanced English under Herrick. In effect, the petition praised Herrick for the manner in which he has conducted his classes, and his knowledge of the literature which he taught.

When Dr. Marvin entered the hall where the meeting was to be held, there was no mention of the petition.

As the students, who had come prepared for a showdown on the Herrick question, gathered Dr. Marvin prepared to address the meeting.

It was not until there had been lengthy discussion of school finances, and what happens to student funds that the question was brought to the floor.

Dr. Marvin, however, refused to discuss the petition, which had not been presented officially to him.

"Such matters," said he, "should not and do not come under the jurisdiction of the student body."

Efforts to bring to Dr. Marvin's attention the fact that the students wished to discuss the Herrick matter failed.

Dr. Marvin switched from one subject to another, and said he did not wish to talk about Dr. Herrick if Dr. Herrick were not present.

"Perhaps," said he, "Dr. Herrick can tell you why he is leaving us. The facts are well known to him. Late last night it was understood the petition for the renewal of the contract would be submitted to the trustees, but this report was unconfirmed."

Union Roll Cut Laid to Hotel's Ousting of Girl

Labor Agent Tells NLRB Other Waitresses Feared Dismissal.

Morris L. Verbos, business agent of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers' Alliance, declared at a National Labor Board hearing yesterday that the discharge of Mrs. Mabel Norman Willard, coffee shop waitress, materially had cut union membership.

Verbos testified before Trial Examiner Edwin S. Smith that other waitresses had told him they would be afraid of possible dismissal if they testified in Mrs. Norman's behalf.

The union agent's testimony came at an afternoon session of the board. Earlier in the day the Willard management had agreed to allow the board to hold an election among its uniformed service employees and coffee shop waitresses to determine their policy in regard to the union.

The management conceded that if a majority of either group is in favor of Local 781 of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers' Alliance, that union will be recognized for collective bargaining purposes.

Mrs. Norman, whom the board contends was discharged because of testimony she gave at another labor hearing, took the stand to explain the circumstances surrounding her dismissal.

The pretty waitress declared that she had been given less than four hours notice and first had been told by her superior that she was being ousted because the union had not transferred her to another hotel. Later, she said, she was told that her discharge was for incompetence.

School Athletics Increase Is Urged

A plea for an enlarged program of physical education in the District schools and increased equipment was made last night by James E. Pixlee, football coach and director of athletics at George Washington University. He spoke before fifty members of the Federation of Business Men's Associations at the Hamilton Hotel.

Pixlee said it is a "crying crime" to spend "billions" to produce better pigs and chickens, and relatively nothing to produce better boys and girls. He exhorted the school board of blame.

Pixlee was the chief speaker at the dinner and business meeting, presided over by President Theodore S. Grape.

Zoo Tunnel Meets Favor Of Park Body

Technical Staff Ordered by Commission to Study Scheme.

Delano Is Reappointed; Board Allots 3 Days for Projects.

With its chairman, Frederic A. Delano, reappointed to another six-year term, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission yesterday opened a three-day session to consider important construction projects.

Delano, 74, was reappointed by his nephew, President Roosevelt. Chairman of the commission since its creation in 1926, he first was named to the body by President Coolidge and reappointed by President Hoover. His third term will expire April 30, 1943. No salary is attached to the position.

Favorably impressed with plans to build a vehicular tunnel in the Zoo section of Rock Creek Park, the commission directed its technical staff to give the scheme careful study.

The tunnel would be cut through the steep hill at the southeast corner of the Zoo to permit continuous use of Rock Creek and Potomac parkway, which runs through the Zoo. The Zoo strip is blocked at night, forcing motorists to make a wide detour.

Protects Animals.

The night detour is an expedient to protect sleeping animals from traffic noises. A few years ago the Bureau of Public Roads, which drafted the current scheme, submitted plans for a tunnel which would be built directly beneath animal quarters.

This was vetoed by the Smithsonian Institution, which administers National Zoological Park, and the planning commission.

Improvement of Commodore Barney Circle at the west approach to the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge were taken under consideration. They were submitted by Col. Dan E. Sullivan, Engineer, Commissioner and ex-officio member of the planning group, and Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highway director.

A resolution plans for co-ordinating Banquet Recreation Center (colored) with the junior high school to be erected on the site were approved.

A resolution was adopted recommending organization by the National Resources Committee of a stream pollution commission whose jurisdiction would cover the entire Potomac River Basin. Members of the planning body will attend the luncheon at the Hay-Adams House on the pollution problem.

Triangle Studies.

Studies of proposed development of the Washington-Baltimore-Annapolis triangle were presented. They embrace a comprehensive improvement program including recreational areas, a scenic parkway between Washington and Annapolis, transportation, public services, etc.

The plan includes proposed Federal building construction in the Southwest section, co-operation with the commission recently created by Congress to make plans for a municipal auditorium, street alterations incidental to erection of the Mellon Gallery of Art, proposed scheme and flood control.

Durand Reinstated Year After Strike By U. S. Employees

Exactly one year after Robert Durand was dismissed as a rate checker from the Federal Power Commission—precipitating a strike by the student council, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians—he finds complete reinstatement. An order for him to return to work was issued yesterday.

Durand will resume his minor position in the Power Commission Monday.

He was discharged on the alleged ground of inefficiency, but fellow employees ascribed it to his union activity. They picketed the Commission's building. An arbitration board was set up to hear the case, and held that Durand had been dropped because of his union efforts. The matter hung fire until yesterday, when the return to work order was issued.

Roosevelt High Waitress Leaves Actors Score Mate, Commits Suicide in Flat

Different Cast to Appear in 'Quality Street' at 8:15 Tonight.

Young actors and actresses at Roosevelt High School last night thrilled a capacity audience at the school's auditorium with their annual spring play, Sir James Barrie's "Quality Street."

Not least in contributing to the success of the play were the leading lady and her leading man—Frances Dewey, as Miss Phoebe Throssel, and Joseph Dosh as Valerian Brown.

And the old Barrie favorite was heard in three selections, Padewere's "Minuet," the "Cossack's Revels" of Tschakoff and Aubert's "Crown Jewels."

"Quality Street" was produced with a double cast. At the second presentation tonight, all characters will be portrayed by different persons than those who so capably did their many sides or few last night.

With four exceptions, Mary Henshall, who does Isabelle both nights; Dan Cavalier, who does double duty as the recruiting sergeant; Ben Boving, as an old soldier, and Wayne Hill as a gallant.

In last night's cast were Elizabeth Bogart, as Miss Fannie Willoughby; Dorothy Bell, Miss Mary Willoughby; Grace Linkens, Miss Susan Throssel; Doris Rock, Patty; Ted Sloane, Arthur Wellesley Thompson; Eleanor Sherburne, as Charlotte Parratt; Edward Stahl, Ensign Blades; Barbara Schmitt, Harriet; and Larry Thurston, Lieut. Spicer.

The leading lady tonight will be Jane Davis and her leading man Edward Fowler.

Other cast members tonight will be Marian Bigelow, Alice Cowing, Frances Kressin, Paula Heath, Edythe Silverberg, Richard Rawdon, Josephine Merelman, Joseph Shollenberger, Jacqueline Welsh and Jay Mount.

William Yost, John White and Ernest Gillis contributed to the play's success as guests at the hall, while Alice Rae Nelson, Marie Barrett, Mary Lou Swenarton, Gladys Simpson, Ira Kaplan, Don Hopkins, David Hege, Frank Rich, Dorothy Altman and Sue Marie Spence appeared in the play as school children.

Architect Unit Fears Waste In Memorial

Congress Inquiry Asked of Proposed Monument to Jefferson.

Called 'Another Useless Pile of Marble' in Resolution.

"Incensed" at the "effort to foist another useless pile of marble upon the National Capital" in the form of the proposed memorial to Thomas Jefferson, the Washington Chapter, Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians last night unanimously adopted resolutions recommending a Congressional investigation into the "questionable awarding" of the memorial commission.

The militant organization—which a year ago picked a Government building—assailed the design of the proposed memorial as out of harmony with the character of Jefferson and pointed professional fingers at anticipated construction difficulties.

"The proposed design is completely inappropriate as a memorial to Thomas Jefferson, because of its imperial character so contrary to his true democratic spirit," the resolution stated. The location of a large memorial on the site selected will cause traffic difficulties, and further, "there is no rock for more than a hundred feet below the surface and that rock known to be faulty, so that the foundation will be almost criminally extravagant," it was held.

Regarding the design: "It is so dull and pompous as to make such examples of architecture in America ridiculous. . . . the commission was given to the architect without public competition or even discussion, which is contrary to the essential nature of democratic art," said the resolution that went through without a dissenting vote.

The resolution, it was emphasized, does not place the F. A. E. C. T. of record as opposing an expression to Thomas Jefferson, but simply as opposing the present plan.

The resolution, which was drafted by the PWA housing division, sharply criticized approved plans for the Jefferson monument yesterday. He predicted it will cost five times as much as the $3,000,000 authorized by Congress and said John Russell Pope, the architect, has given it the same quality money which he designed for the proposed Mellon Gallery of Art.

Son of the late Franklin MacVeagh, Secretary of the Treasury in Taft administration, the official said:

"We now have in Washington a petrified forest of Greek and Roman columns. The Mall and Triangular Forum are kind of Roman forums. I hope it is not too late to have an open competition on the Thomas Jefferson Memorial design, thrown open to all architects."

Merchant Shot in Arm In Thwarting Robbers

Harry Lemmer, 47, proprietor of a grocery store, 1329 Fifth street northwest, ten days ago was robbed of $39 by two hold-up men. He decided to carry a gun while tending the store. Last night he had an opportunity to use the weapon when two colored men tried to rob him.

Lemmer was quick on the draw when the men pulled out pistols and ordered him to "reach for the ceiling." He reached for his gun and fired. One of the gunmen returned fire. Then the pair ran. Lemmer was hit in the right arm. He believes he wounded one of the men. The robbers got no money.

Tribute Is Paid To Cleveland By Roosevelt

Declares Courage Was the Dominant Force in His Life.

By the Associated Press.
New York, March 18.—President Roosevelt today named courage as the dominant force in the life of Grover Cleveland, twice recipient of the highest office within the gift of the American people.
Adding his tribute to the memory of Cleveland, the 100th anniversary of whose birth was observed today with the unveiling of a bust in the Hall of Fame at New York University, Mr. Roosevelt said in a letter to Dr. John H. Finley, associate editor of the New York Times: "If we seek the elements in Grover Cleveland's character which make him decide by decade a more commanding figure in the fight to perpetuate the honesty of democracy in our national life, we shall find that the dominant force in his life was courage."
"Among the factors which had given form and pattern to his character long before he became a national figure was courage—the courage which never yields principle to expediency or compromises with truth in any circumstance."
The President listed as other attributes of Mr. Cleveland a "strong sense of rectitude," integrity and impartiality in the conduct of the public business and his insistence upon maintaining the independence of the executive "in those things for which the executive was responsible."
The bust was sculptured by Rudolph Evans.

Adm. Hobson, Santiago Hero, Buried on Arlington Hillside

Navy Pays Final Tribute to Admiral at Services in Fort Myer; Tried to Bottle Up Harbor in War With Spain.

Rear Admiral Richmond Pearson Hobson, 66, who on June 3, 1898, electrified the world by sinking the collier Merrimac in the hope of bottling the Spanish fleet in Santiago Harbor, was buried yesterday afternoon on a sloping hillside in Arlington Cemetery.
Enlisted Navy men carried his gray casket into the Fort Myer Chapel, rolled the flag-draped casket down the aisles between the pews where scarcely 100 persons were seated. On the chapel steps, the honorary pall bearers lined in three. Other Navy and Army officers stood about in uniform.

A Navy band played "Lead, Kindly Light," and the strains, low-pitched, picked up the notes of the same hymn that rolled from the organ in the chapel. Marines, in dress uniform, brought their rifles to present arms.
Tells of Heroic Feat.
The service was read by Navy Chaplain Joseph H. Brooks. He later read from what was obviously the official record, detailing how Hobson and seven men—one a stow-away—put out at dawn with the collier on one of war's most spectacular missions. Then he related the world-wide acclaim of the act, acclaim even from the Spaniards. He told something of Hobson's later endeavors in life—his campaigns in the interest of prohibition and world peace.

Then a black-draped caisson rolled in front of the chapel and was followed, on foot, to the graveside by the honorary pallbearers, the Marines and the Navy Band. A brief procession of automobiles followed.
After prayer and benediction, a Navy detail fired three rifle volleys above the grave, a bugler sounded "Taps" and away on a hillside gulfed a salute. Framed by snow banks and the white marble of the amphitheater, the guard on the Unknown Soldier's Tomb marched with strict precision on what was to him another day of watch.

Descent of Admiral.

But below him and in front of him, they were burying a man who once startled the world as sharply as Lindbergh startled it in 1927.
Born in Greensboro, Ala., on August 17, 1870, he was a descendant on his father's side of the English naval officer, Admiral Hobson, who struck the British flag in New Zealand soil in the seventeenth century. He was married on May 25, 1905, to Grizelda Houston Hull, of Tuxedo Park, N. Y., who survives him with three children—Richmond, Lucia and George.
Hobson's death occurred Tuesday in New York. He had put on his hat and coat and was preparing to leave his home when a heart attack ended his career.

Continental Co. Is Held Liable For $1,000,000

Verdict May Mean Payment By Stockholders to Commercial Trust.

The complicated affairs of the Continental Trust Co., which was absorbed by the now-closed Commercial National Bank early in 1930, moved a step nearer settlement late yesterday when Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, in District Court, issued a ruling holding the Continental liable for almost $1,000,000 to the Commercial.
In the event the ruling is allowed to stand by the higher courts—and both sides announce they will appeal—stockholders of the Continental may be called upon to make up the losses to the Commercial.
In his ruling Justice O'Donoghue said that the Continental was indebted to the Commercial for $367,636.40 on the liabilities assumed by the Commercial when the two institutions were merged. He authorized the Commercial receiver to sell assets of the Continental to liquidate the debt.
In addition, the jurist found that $118,650 and accrued interest of several years, which had been paid out as dividends on stock of the Continental, should be repaid the Commercial, which had advanced the funds. Another item ruled upon was that the Continental, as the corporate holder of 4,001 shares of stock of the Commercial, which is now rapidly nearing complete liquidation, was liable for a stock assessment of 100 per cent of the par value of the stock. That would be $400,100.

The Commercial was closed by the Treasury Department just prior to the March, 1933, banking holiday when it sought to restrict depositors from withdrawing more than a small percentage of their deposits. It has never been permitted to reopen.

'Abuse of Liberty' Scored in Speech By Mrs. Pinchot

Condemning "economic royalists" who are "deliberately planning abuses for the suppression of civil liberties," Mrs. Cornelia Bryce Pinchot, wife of former Governor Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, last night demanded a "bigger and better democracy in every field for America."

Speaking before the American Civil Liberties Union in the National Press Club, she decried the power of the Supreme Court "to turn back the clock and thus block liberty."

Girl Thief Tends Shop While Pal Ties Owner

Chicago, March 18 (AP)—A girl bandit waited on customers of Frank Pandolf's delicatessen last night while a male accomplice tied up the proprietor in a back room.

Occasionally the girl ran back to inquire of Pandolf the price of eggs and summer sausage. She and her escort departed with $14 after a 15-minute sale.

DeMille Finds New Star Over Whom to Spout

Franciska Gaal Elicits an Eloquent Blast From the 'Old Eagle' of Lots.

Hollywood, March 18.—Conservatively classifying her as a "youthful combination of Helen Hayes, Mary Pickford, Elizabeth Bergner and Clara Bow," Cecil B. De Mille, baldish old eagle of Paramount, announces that his Hungarian import, Franciska Gaal, will have the feminine lead in his "Buccaneer."

This beating about the bush is reminiscent of not-so-long-ago days when De Mille epics used to be billed as "great dramas of love, hate, fear, remorse, courage, vengeance, despair and triumph."

Actually, the De Mille combination special is a large-eyed, dark-haired, husky-voiced lass who got all of two columns in the local press when she passed through customs last December.

Learning Unreluctant English. Since then she has been busy learning to speak English without the liverwurst inflection, and toping off her experience in European films by drama-coaching with Josephine Dillon Gable.

Of her, the inarticulate De Mille says breathlessly: "She registers charm and pliancy as I have never known a human being to do on the screen."

Miss Gaal is pronounced "Gaul," as if she were divided in three parts. De Mille had no comment as to how she stacks up in a bathtub.

Feed a Fable. The Harriet Hooter-Ginger Rogers feud under construction among gossipers can be filed in the baloney section. It's pure fiction.

The basis for the alleged "Donnybrook" is Hooter's ballet specialty with Fred Astaire in "Shall We Dance?" his first film, hoofing with a partner other than Rogers. The theory is that the opera is being made a "Hooter picture," which leaves Rogers an orphan and not pleased about it.

Actually Hooter doesn't cut even slightly into the Rogers' pasture, and their relations are perfectly friendly. But in any event, Rogers isn't the feuding kind.

Going democratic by a large majority, Greta Garbo, bride of Sweden, permitted 200 extras to watch her hoof the mazurka with Charles Boyer in a "Madame, Walewska" scene.

In other days Goddess Garbo's hopping was screened from vulgar eyes with black drapes, and crowd effects accomplished by cutting. Garbo and Boyer circulated among $75-a-day steppers, who, however, kept a respectful distance.

Mr. Oakie and Mr. Penner. "Look out for the horse car," took on a new meaning for Jack Oakie, when the comic figured in a runaway as a horsecar driver in "East of New York." Can jump the track and narrowly missed overturning.

Oakie's masterful driving prevented a catastrophe, said Oakie. Joe Penner is ruled off his own grounds by a contractor building his new house in Beverly Hills.

Penner spent all his spare time on the spot worrying the contractor until the contractor ultimatum him to quit kibitzing or pay $100 additional per kibitz.

MacFall Is Ordered To D. C. Navy Duty. Capt. Roscoe C. MacFall, U. S. Navy, has been ordered to duty as director of fleet training at the Navy Department here, according to yesterday's Navy orders. He will be relieved from his present station, commanding the U. S. S. California, in early June.

Yesterday's orders also sent Capt. George S. Bryan to duty in the hydrographic office in the Navy Department. His present post is chief of staff, commander of scouting force.

Dykstra Is Appointed Wisconsin U. President. Madison, Wis., March 18 (AP). Regents of the University of Wisconsin awarded Clarence A. Dykstra, a one-year contract as president of the university today.

Reaffirming its stand for subways for Washington as "the only solution of our traffic problems," the District of Columbia Federation of Federal Employees Unions has adopted resolutions calling on Congress to appropriate funds for a subway. Nelson B. Bell About The Show Shops Holy Week Will Occasion a Lull in the Theater's Drive for Highest Records Enjoyed in Last Decade

Amusements Can Afford to Sacrifice One Week Out of Year to Religious Contemplation of Christianity's Most Sublime Event; Katharine Hepburn to Be Seen at the National in 'Jane Eyre,' Despite Week's Box-Office Threat; Variety Throws Its Most Successful and Diversified Party on St. Patrick's Night; Free Scholarships and Gossip of the Playhouse.

ALTHOUGH Katharine Hepburn is coming to the National Theater on Monday night in Helen Jerome's dramatization of Charlotte Brontë's novel of "Jane Eyre," a theater guild production that has been long awaited in the National Capital, the usual recession from the high point of their seasonal activity will be notable in Washington theaters as a result of Holy Week.

The Belasco Theater will be dark for the seven days preceding Easter Sunday and at Loew's Palace, partly because of the excellence of Irving Berlin's musical and in part because it was deemed inexpedient to inaugurate the engagement of "Maytime," costarring Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, during one of the most stagnant theatrical weeks of the year, "On the Avenue" will be continued for a second week.

The other bookings in the downtown area are such as to lend color to the belief that the managerial minds are cognizant of the fact that it is futile to combat the deep-seated reverence of a large segment of the District's population for the most sacred event in the history of Christian civilization.

The amusement world can afford to pause in its upward sweep to permit the celebration in devout spirit of the most sanctified event in the annals of mankind.

The significance of Holy Week is apt to be lost to the casual mind in the hurly-burly of everyday living and the quest of entertainment, but a brief contemplation of the true import of this period of reverential respite from the excitements of the rest of the year will not come amiss to any mind or heart.

I do not resent the theaters' pulling in their horns, so to speak, during the ensuing week. I applaud it.

The St. Patrick's Day "Cruise to Ireland," aboard the S. S. Erin-Go-Kosher, staged by the Variety Club of Washington in the Willard Hotel on Wednesday night, was the most successful soiree in the history of the club. The clubrooms overflowed into the Presidential suite of the Willard and housed a crowd in excess of 200—a number considerably in excess of the membership of the club. Breakfast was served in the early hours of the morning and a wide diversity of entertainment devices conspired to keep the guests interested far into the night.

All of this is to be attributed to the far-sightedness and careful planning of Dr. Frank T. Rhine, first aid to ailing thespians with his skillful drugless therapy, who conceived the entire idea and was chiefly instrumental in putting it into practical effect.

A long list of distinguished guests were in attendance, among them Westbrock Pegler, The Post's widely read columnist, Sande Williams and his singing instrumentalists, from El Patio, and many more.

My congratulations to "Doc" Rhine and all of the others who had a hand in providing so gay and variegated an evening.

Ten of Washington's leading orchestra conductors have been invited by Zee Maninger John J. Payette, of Warner Brothers local interests, to zone "Head Over Heels in Love," on the screen at the Earle Theater today.

Although the town's baton-wielders are expected to react favorably to the versatile talents of Jessie Matthews, British star of the picture, the chief reason for the questing of the maestros lies in the fact that Gordon and Revel architected the score of her vehicle. These prolific song-writers were taken to England especially for this particular chore.

Since the list of Gordon and Revel successes is lengthy, it is no surprise to find such an instantaneous hit as "May I Have the Next Romance With You" in the score that Miss Matthews sings and dances. The other songs are "Looking Around Corners," "Through the Courtyard of Love," "Darn" and the title song.

The bandmen who have been invited to view the picture have been asked to pick their favorite melody from the six tunes. On this critical jury will be Pete Macias, the High-Ho; Barne, Shoreham; Sande Williams, Carlton; Bill Strickland, Lotus; Little Sam Robbins, Raleigh; Al Sakol, La Pare; Sacha Bartovicky, Troika; Matt Windsor, Volga Boatman; Sidney, of the Mayflower, and John Shaw, Madrilion.

Their verdict ought to be authentic.

Speaking of music, it comes to me from a roundabout source that the reason this desk was the only one to receive an advance release of the recordings of the score of Universal's new musical, "Top of the Town," was because my old friend Jimmy Gralings, general sales manager of the company, requested it. That's just one more item on the debit side of my account with Jimmy, a grand person and a guy who could sell electric refrigerators to the Eskimos or oil burners to the natives of equatorial Africa.

In paying tribute to the memory of the late Sir Philip Ben Greet, England's famous Shakespearean actor-manager, his nephew, Maurice Greet, will award four free scholarships for a full course of study at the Greet Academy of Dramatic Art, in his revered uncle's name.

These scholarships will be awarded upon the termination of a public audition to be held on Thursday, March 25, at 7:30 p. m. in the Greet Academy. All applications for the awards must be in writing, stating the candidate's experiences and qualifications.

Judges in this audition will be professional Broadway artists, critics and teachers. Anyone between the ages of 18 and 60 may compete.

It is Dick Tennyson, just out of a sick bed, who calls up to say that beginning today at Loew's Capitol Theater, Evelyn Sheridan, a playground director in this city, will sing a passage in the overture number to be offered by Phil Lampkin and his orchestra. Miss Sheridan is a lyric soprano.

Middle-of-the-Night Note. "Maytime," the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer musical, costarring Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, is to be screened for the drama desks in the private projection room of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange Saturday afternoon at 1. I'll try to stop by on my way home.

Contract Bridge. By Mrs. Ely Culbertson. One of the most common errors of inexperienced players is to trump a losing card too early. They overlook the fact that the winner of a trick has the right to lead at the next trick—and that the right to lead may be just as important as winning the trick. The hand which follows is a "type"—that is, its theme occurs time and again in actual play.

This turn is only one of several that will support Wini Shaw, the headliner of the living portion of the entertainment the Capitol will present for the new week.

In Hollywood With JIMMY FIDDLER

HOLLYWOOD, March 19. I am off on a tangent again today, this time to air the fact that I have a terrific yen to be a studio makeup man. Nothing more intrigues me than the thought of spending my days touching up Claudette Colbert's lips or shaping Marlene Dietrich's eyebrows. And the duty of powdering Jean Harlow's back for evening gown sequences seems the type of work that should call for volunteers, rather than $500 salaries.

A makeup artist recently told me that it is simple to transform an ordinary face to appear beautiful on-screen. The tough assignment is to make a lovely girl look homely. This chap was ordered to accomplish that with Virginia Bruce. Since her role called for Virginia to look beautiful toward the finish of the picture, the makeup department could not resort to a puffy nose or other disfigurement. Final good results were obtained by using a frothy wig, flat makeup without highlights, no rouge and no eyebrow pencil.

At Hal Roach studio, freckle-faced Alfalfa Switzer, of "Our Gang" (the does the off-key singing, once heard, never forgotten) boasted that he now has 28 goats. Knowing what one goat smells like, and earing not at all for the idea of sampling the blended odors of 28, I declined Alfalfa's invitation to visit the Switzer ranch. But this number of goats, plus the kid's statement that some day he will have 500, prompted investigation. Alfalfa's parents gave out information that these goats are milked daily by an employee of the county, and the rich lard is given to poor children who suffer from malnutrition.

Mention of Alfalfa recalls the fact that "Our Gang" manages to dig up the damndest appellations for its young actors. Alfalfa is tricky enough, but what about Spanky, Farina, Wheeler, Porky, Chubby and Buckwheat? Takes me back to the embryonic days when I was nicknamed "Dopey," for perfectly obvious reasons.

While you are laughing at the scene in "The Last of Mrs. Cheyne" where Joan Crawford helps Frank Morgan put on his shoes, you might get a bigger kick out of it if you know that this sequence was originally written as serious drama. The fact that Morgan is extremely ticklish about the toes makes all the difference. Every time Joan touched his feet, Frank went off into a giggling spasm. The director finally re-wrote the scene, and thus a physical frailty produced one of the big laughs of the picture.

Lyda Roberti tells this on herself, so I guess she won't mind. If you have not seen Lyda on the screen, you can probably figure out from her name that she is foreign and has plenty of trouble with the King's English; in fact, about half the time her close friends cannot understand her. But to the story:

A few years back, Lyda was traveling with the road company of "Pardon My English." When the troupe reached Philadelphia, Lyda thought she would try a new scheme to make herself understood. So, when the porter took her bags, she merely said "Pardon My English," meaning that her luggage was to go with that of others of the cast. The porter grinned. "That's all right, m'am," he said. "Ah don't speak his too well myself."

Smoking Permitted METROPOLITAN

The Post's New Yorker By LEONARD LYONS

AFTER THE Washington opening of her play, "Reflected Glory," Talullah Bankhead went to the home of her father, Speaker Bankhead. In the living room that night two others were present—Mrs. Bankhead and Jim Proctor, Talullah's publicist. For an hour and a half, in the privacy of that room, the Speaker of the House gave vent to all his Thespian urge—reciting 16 classical roles, from "Hamlet" to "Romeo." Then, as a windup, the legislator performed his role of roles—that of Jeeter Lester!

BILL KNOX is touring the Broadway hot spots these nights. Knox is the head of Greenmount Maple Liquor, and is anxious to popularize that product in the New York night clubs. Whenever he visits any club Knox deposits a quart bottle of his liquor gratis with the bartender, orders one drink from that bottle, pays for that drink—and then leaves.

HENRY DUNN attended one of the guest-star nights on West Fifty-second street Sunday night. Jay C. Flippen was master of ceremonies and introduced the celebrities. "And now," Flippen introduced, "I want you to meet Henry Levine—of Cross & Dunn!"

SIDNEY KINGSLEY took his fiancée, Hella Stoddard, to Jack and Charlie's last night. Kingsley, who smokes long cigars, ordered an unusually long cigar. "Put a tick on it," he was advised, "and it would make a nice freetracker." "Oh, no," Miss Stoddard shrieked—pointing at the underpaid playwright—"because you'd be the thing that went off!"

THE OTHER DAY Ben Bernie announced that he was retiring his orchestra. Sunday night, walking down Wilshire boulevard in Hollywood, Bernie met Wilkie Mahoney, his New York gig writer. "Hey, what're you doing out here?" Bernie asked in surprise. "Well, I read you were retiring your band," Mahoney informed, "so I came out here to retire my gags!"

THE FILMARTE THEATER is exhibiting the Max Eastman film "Tear to Lening," containing some newsreel clips taken during the days of the Revolution in Russia. Last week a lady seated in the orchestra saw one of the mob scenes on the screen, emitted a shriek and rushed from the theater—even forgetting her purse. The next day she phoned, made inquiries about that purse and explained the reason for her hasty departure. Her name is Dr. Angelica Balabanoff. She was secretary of the Third Internationale. She had stolen herself—in the newsreel clip of one of the bloody mob scenes.

RAY VIR DEN, vice president of Lenin & Mitchell, feels very grateful toward the United States Government—to this democratic system which permitted his income last year to be a not inconsiderable figure. Mr. Vir Den, therefore, prepared his income tax statement last week, resolved to give the Government every penny due it. He even mailed it March 11—four days before the deadline—to ease the hardship worked upon the Federal employees as a result of the last-minute rush. But the generous and painstaking Mr. Vir Den yesterday received a shock from the ungrateful Government. Treasury returned his penny tax statement. "Because there was no cent postage overdue!"

A PLAYWRIGHT, whose show ran two performances recently, is without funds. For the last few weeks he's been sponging from friends and sleeping at their apartments. Last night he sealed himself with some companions at Tony's, yawned and stretched his arms overhead. "Well," he sighed wearily, "guess I'll be going home." His companions leaned forward and chorused: "Yeah! Whose?"

THE GOVERNOR of North Carolina contacted Billy Rose, with a view toward getting the producer to take over the proposed North Carolina Fair. "I suppose you'll want your usual fee," an interviewer suggested, "a piece of the gross receipts?" "Oh, no," Rose explained, "my usual fee—a piece of North Carolina!"

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl Whose Indifference Finally Drove Faithful Suitor Away Asks How to Win Him Back.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am bringing you my problem because, as a constant reader of your column, I know you will render judgment impartially. I am 18 years old and for the past two years I have been going with a boy two years my senior. He was my first sweetheart and I really expected to marry him some day. During the two years we went together no one could have been more attentive or more in love than he was (or appeared to be).

All that time, although I liked him, I would never give him any satisfaction. I constantly argued with him, picked on him and made him feel inferior to myself. I can see now, Miss Haworth, that although I may have been the better read, he is miles above me in character. Finally, just before Christmas, we broke off. At first I thought, "He'll come back. He always does." But this time I was wrong.

Two weeks later I went to see him and agreed to meet him half way. He said he would call me, but he never did. I have been deathly sick ever since. I can't eat or sleep. I am afraid of the rain. I am going to lose my job. I have tried to forget by going out with other boys but it's no use. They all seem repulsive to me. I have lost considerable weight over it. But I have changed. As long as I live, I'll never be mean to anyone again. I have learned my lesson. But what good does it do me? It's too late now. He doesn't know.

While we were going together, although I went with other boys, he would not go with anyone else. I begged him to. Now that we don't go together, he has been going with another girl out. I don't know whether or not he likes her but I don't see how, after being in love with me so long, he can help but have some feeling left. I want him more than anything in the world. How can I get him back? I'd never lose him again.

I have some beautiful gifts he gave me, and his letters. Should I return them? He is too proud to return to me now and I am too proud to call him. Please help me. I am desperate—and so ashamed.

HEARTSICK.

The Thing To Do.
DEAR HEARTSICK: We may as well face facts. It is very likely you have completely lost your erstwhile hold on the young man's heart. Unrequited devotion (or, as in this case, devotion seemingly unrequited; and certainly not appreciated until too late) is something like the proverbial load on the camel's back. Sometimes just one added straw of hopelessness causes the whole structure to collapse. Because the young man was your faithful suitor for two years it does not necessarily follow that he could not experience a complete change of heart virtually overnight, once you had provoked him too far.

Following your pre-Christmas quarrel, which was probably more your fault than his (judging from your story), he may have reasoned: "What's the use? I've done everything in my power to win her love and respect and I've failed. I have swallowed my pride time after time to make up, and instead of appreciating it, she seems only to despise me for it. Never again for me." And so he decided to stay away if it killed him. He found he could stay away—and time. Then you came with half-way overtures toward peace. And when he realized your long-time cruel indifference had been mostly pretense; that you had been putting him through hell for two years for no particular reason, he may have found it in his heart to despise you and even dislike you. His recovery would have been considerably expedited, too, if in the meantime he had met some other girl who gave him the admiration, appreciation, understanding and sympathy which you consistently withheld.

There is only one way to make up—if making up is possible. And that is to cast your pride to the four winds and write him the finest, sincerest love letter you are capable of writing. Tell him more or less what you have told me here: that you have changed; that you have learned your lesson; that so long as you live, you will never again be mean to anyone; that you love him more than anything in the world; that you realize his character is infinitely finer than yours has been; that you have always cared for him but didn't know how to express your affection gracefully; or even if it was wise to reveal your heart; and that you have been deathly sick at losing the best and dearest friend you ever had or can ever hope to have. Ask him to have the merciful kindness to forgive your meanness, and to give you a fair chance to prove the sincerity of your spiritual reformation. If he cares for you at all, he will accept your appeal should bring him back with a softened heart; and even though his love has died, I believe in your compassion he might consent to be friends with you at least. He might come to see you occasionally, and you could use those occasions for showing him a sweeter, gentler, humbler, more lovable side of your nature than he has ever known.

It is possible, of course, that there is no getting him back. But if you love him so desperately, and are so sickened by remorse and self-reproach that your very health and job are threatened, I think you should take the chance. After all, he came back to you time after time without encouragement, so surely you can risk your pride just once. And if you do write, and he doesn't respond, you will still have the consolation of knowing you did everything that you could under the circumstances to make amends. Remember, it is better to try and fail than to do nothing at all.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Handkerchief Gets New Social Honor

No Longer Step-Child of Clothing Family.

Handkerchiefs have risen in the world. They are no longer the step-children of the clothing family. In bygone days it was considered ill-bred for a lady even to touch a handkerchief to her aristocratic nose. But now she would be lost without a little fabric square to stifle a yawn, dab a damp forehead or muffle a cough or a sneeze. Today cleanliness is the only thing required for the social acceptance of handkerchiefs. Fortunately, they are so inexpensive and so easy to launder that fresh ones can be used with reckless abandon throughout the day.

Hot towels will keep white handkerchiefs snowy. If they have been used by cold sufferers they should be kept separate from the rest of the family wash and boiled after thorough washing.

Capes of Swank and Grace Are Prominent Features of the New Costumes for Spring

The Post's Fashion Editor who recently studied spring styles at their source, the New York merchandise markets and fashion openings, is giving Washington women practical advice on the clothes-buying problem in a series of articles. Today she discusses capes.

By Ethel Ehlen.

CAPEs are among the most important mediums in a spring wardrobe, which promotes romance and femininity. Capes are being shown with suits, tailored and afternoon frocks. They appear in numerous materials from sheers and sheer woolsens to heavy tweeds. They give a certain air of swank and grace to any costume, and following the latest trend in the mode, are ageless. A woman of any age or silhouette may wear a cape with complete fashion assurance.

Deviating from the conventional top coat, which is usually associated with the tailored suit, a finger-tip length cape of harmonizing or contrasting color, now lends distinction. There are numerous three-piece suits of unusual chic, made of soft tweed, and consisting of short jackets, skirts and coats, which may be collared in fox or lynx, dyed to match the material in color. These are also striking cape-suits, where two, three and four color tones are combined effectively. For instance, a skirt and jacket may be of different tints of the same shade, and the sweater, untrimmed cape, of bold plaid. This type of course, is more casual and informal.

Sheer wool or silk crepe frocks flaunting short capes of self material instead of jackets, are considered newer and smarter. Crepe frocks topped by sheer wool capes are also much in evidence; they are extremely practical, as the cape may be worn with other costumes, and in some instances with suits also. Colors as well as materials may be contrasted, with the cape as the medium of contrast.

Black sheer woolen, black and white printed silk crepe, and white pique are cleverly combined in this smart cape ensemble by Alia. Note the swag-ger air given to the costume by the gaily-lined cape. The white hat with black patent leather bird, and white gloves, enhance the picture.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

One of the leading children's specialists in New York used to say that when told him that his baby was constipated, his reply was "Mother, you ought to get down on your knees and thank the Lord."

Diarrhea kills more babies than anything else. Constipation has probably never been responsible for a single death. For many months of the baby's life it takes little else but milk. Fruit juices and pureed vegetables are added quite early nowadays because of the low iron content in milk, but all of these have little residue and water matter and, therefore, are constipating diets. On his formula sheet, which Dr. M. C. Overton, of Lubbock, Tex., gives to mothers, he has printed in large type the sentence: Remember, Constipation is Desirable in Babies. There can be extreme degrees of constipation in which the stool is hard and dry and can be expelled only with difficulty. In this case a change in the formula, changing the type of sugar, or the use of a suppository or soap stick is indicated. It is sometimes said that suppositories cause the child to form the habit of needing such help; that it will never have a normal stool. This, however, is not true, because as the child grows older and its diet increases and it moves about more, the bowels will act without any artificial aid.

Drugs Undesirable.

Medicine or laxative drugs should never be used with a child as a habit, and only under the most extreme circumstances anyway. Cathartics are irritating to the tender mucous lining of the stomach and bowels of a young child, and may even cause loss of blood. Many experiments have been performed to show that constipation itself does not result in ill health in children. One pediatrician in New York went so far as to give medicine to a number of children to keep them constipated, and in spite of the fact that they had a stool only every four or five days, they remained in good health with a feeling of well being. There is no rule for a child, any more than there is for an adult, as to the number of stools it should have per day. For some children it is just as normal to have a stool every other day as it is for others to have a stool every day.

Constipation in older children is usually due to carelessness. They are too busy to regard the call. In these cases the development of habit time and a slight change in diet is all that is necessary for treatment. Applesauce and green vegetables are better than laxatives. An apple at bedtime is just as valuable in keeping the doctor away from children as it is in adults.

Questions from Readers.

H. S. M.: "Is it a good practice for my husband to use ordinary vaseline daily on his hair as a dressing?" My husband's hair keeps thinning in spite of this treatment.
Answer: Vaseline will do his hair no harm even if used daily, but it is not likely that it will prevent the hair falling out.
M. H.: "Will you tell me whether sorghum molasses is fattening?"
Answer: It has about the same nutritional value as ordinary sugar, with suits also. Colors as well as materials may be contrasted, with the cape as the medium of contrast.

Crab Soup Idea For Luncheon Is Lenten Hint

Invite the Bridge Club in; Is Surprisingly Easy To Make.

By Rebekah Blake.

NOW THAT it is late Lenten season, have those dozens of meatless menus you had in mind suddenly become tedious and limited? Are you trying to put off your Lenten to entertain the bridge club until Lent is over? Cheer up, for here is a grand luncheon idea.

Start with crab soup—and serve it piping hot with tiny crusty cheese biscuits.

Avocado and grapefruit salad to follow—with more hot cheese biscuits.

Homemade chocolate layer cake for dessert—you'll have your own favorite recipe for that—and of course coffee.

Here's the recipe for the crab soup—and you'd never believe how easily it's put together!

Crab Soup.

1 quart milk
1 can Chateaux crab meat, flaked
2 hard boiled eggs
Grated peel of 1 lemon
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon flour
1 teaspoon anchovies
1/2 cup cream
Salt and pepper to taste
Sherry (optional)

Mash eggs to a paste with fork, add butter, flour, lemon peel and dash of pepper. Bring milk to boil and pour gradually on the paste. Add crab meat and put over a low fire, simmer 5 minutes, add cream and bring to a boil again. At last minute add salt, anchovies, and sherry to taste if desired, heating the whole soup so it will be served hot. Do not boil after adding sherry. Serves four generously.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth McRae Boykin.
THE NURSERY RHYME about the old woman who lived in a shoe is all wrong. It should have been about the old shoes that lived "on" the woman—crowding her closets and forming stumbling blocks when she went searching for her last year's challis blouse.

For summer there are exquisite capes of white or pastel tints, with voluminous collars of fox in the same hue. There are also white untrimmed capes of the tailors' collection. One tall, fair-skinned lady to wear with daytime spring frocks of the more casual styling. Both types are vying with the more conventional top coat of white flannel tweed and such, which is usually associated with summer wear.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, March 18.

OUR MADDEST convention of all has come and gone, leaving us much limper and perhaps sadly wiser. I refer to the free-for-all of the International Beauty Shop Owners' annual meeting, just concluded at the Hotel Pennsylvania, which thinks nothing of housing three or four of these at once.

This yearly affair combines all the best and most fantastic features of the 5 o'clock subway mauling and a department store basement week before Christmas. Beauty shop owners from all over the Nation assemble, together with thousands of the local hair-wavers, face-rubbers and nail-gougers, to behold the workings of the latest gadgets in the beauty business upon human guinea pigs.

I felt it my duty to attend once, though I knew it would smother me with blustery and did not push my way through the jammed aisles. I saw dozens of our sisters having their hair done, their faces reassembled and their nails brought to a high shine—all for free. It was all done with wires, mirrors and mystic passes of trained hands. There were high spots, of course. I saw a dozen hairdressers fix a dozen thatches in a race against time. It was dazed, near as exciting as a hockey game, with raucous partisans cheering on the nimble fingers of "Emile," "Robert," "Nino" and "Maggie" as a plastic surgeon operated on three noses in rapid succession and brought them to a point, while six good sisters fainted dead away at the sight.

All sorts of influences in hair-do's were evident, among them the Jane Eyre of Hepburn, the Camille of Garbo and the Mme. Bovary of the "new" I saw probably 300 Mrs. Simpsons wandering or sitting patiently. A great sight, and a pretty professional. You never heard such business gossip, inside done and audible cheering and sneering in all your born days. What a show—once!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Katharine Cornell, seeking a change of pace from "The Wings of the Victory," is now playing three weekly performances of Shaw's "Candida," certainly one of her most charming performances. Cornell has been playing such showy roles in the past few years that it's a pleasure to see her hear as just a woman again. And what a lovely play, and it's now 43 years old. Prof. Pitkin, Mrs. Simpson and the rest win again!

Elsa Maxwell, world's champion party-burster for all weights and ages, ran a very successful fashion show and beauty-and-talent contest for a local store. Blazinda finished one-two-three in the latter, all in the teens. Drat these two-heads, anyhow! Elsa lured stage stars like Bea Lillie and several real live countesses to her big racket, and surely earned her sizable fee.

I just got my copy of "As I Live and Breathe," by Willie Snow Ethridge, who was born in Savannah, Ga., and brought up in Macon. Any one who has or ever had a newspaperman for a mate will enjoy Mrs. Ethridge's tale. As one of these girls I should like to get Willie into a corner for a good quiet talk. I'll be I can match her experience, even steven or better!

There are rumors that Mr. Hubert Wilkins and his handsome night-club singing wife, Lady Suzanne, are not 100 per cent in rapport, but I saw them together at the theater "other night," and he was being so courtly, not to mention knightly. . . . Culture marches ON! There are now four Rs being taught at the Seneca Falls High School up-State, with the Rhumba added to the old three at weekly classes. . . . Constantly amazed am I (as Time Magazine would have it) at the concerned versatility of our gels. After years as a voice on the radio, Irene Beasley steps into one of the hotter Broadway night clubs and goes like a breeze. Our Irene is still the Village Queen!

Remember when we used to go into a milliner's den and just buy a hat or two? Old-fashioned—definitely dated. Now co-operation is the keynote. Everything must jibe. For instance, our peppy Mme. Nicole, the hat-maker, has Mme. Fedora designing frocks under the same roof, so that the customer may have the headpiece and the torso-covering in perfect harmony. And if you don't have your hair done to collaborate with your hats—well, it's just too bad about YOU! Copyright, 1937, by Alice Hughes Syndicate, Inc.

Home Institute. Brighten Your Conversation

HAVE you ever tried to be an easy, fascinating talker—and lamely bumbled "er-er-er"?

What wouldn't you give, in moments like this, for sparkling, colorful phrases to give your speech grace and charm?

When compliments are in order, a month's friendly phrases, "Good for you" or "I couldn't have been better" or "We were all thrilled" will make you seem properly appreciative.

Rich phrases like "stirring and bold," "boisterous wind," "black as a raven," can make even talk about the weather sound inspired. You can express sympathy in a more kindly, gracious manner if you know the tactful opening phrases, such as "I was so sorry to hear—" or "I know how you feel" or "I am distressed at the news."

You think it's time to change the trend of the conversation? Lead into the new topic without a jolt by saying "I have just heard a surprising thing—" or "It has just occurred to me—" or "What would you do if—" And perk up your speech with colorful word combinations—"dazzling brightness," "feverish impatience," "chilly rebuff," "joyfully eager."

Our 40-page booklet, "1,500 Useful Phrases," tells also the gracious thing to say in giving and accepting or refusing invitations, expressing sympathy, greeting and leave-taking. Suitable phrases for business interviews and telephone conversations.

Mrs. Cordell Hull, Other Notables Attend Tea of Rajamaitris; 'Didi,' 2-Year-Old Daughter of Siamese Envoy, Acts as Hostess

Early Arrivals, Including Secretary of State's Wife, Greeted With 'How Do You Do?' in Perfect English by Smallest Hostess in D. C.

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

"Didi," the little daughter of the Minister of Siam and Mme. Rajamaitri, was the belle of the occasion for the brief time she was present yesterday afternoon at the tea her parents gave at the Legation.

Whenever the Minister and Mme. Rajamaitri entertain, friends go early, hoping to see little "Didi"—not quite 2—who is always there for a few minutes at the beginning of the party. Yesterday those who arrived first were met at the top of the stairway, just outside the entrance to the drawing room where the host and hostess received, by a dainty little person wearing a pink ribbon around her straight black hair, an embroidered pink organza frock with a carnation tucked in the ribbon sash, and little red slippers. The dress had been made and embroidered by her mother.

Mrs. Cordell Hull Greeted.

Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, was one of those whom "Didi" greeted. She extended her little hand, curtsied and said "how-do-you-do" in perfect English. Then came Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, and Mrs. Jacob Leander Looze, who had brought for her a box of favors from the St. Patrick's Day party at which she entertained on Wednesday.

Guests stood nearby to watch Didi's delight as she drew one thing after another from the box while Mrs. Looze held it. Not until the Capital's littlest hostess had been taken upstairs by her nurse, did the party become an altogether grown-up Washington gathering.

Mme. Rajamaitri wore a black taffeta gown with embroidered dots of white, a scarf and belt of American Beauty velvet, and a corsage of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Guests went from the drawing room to the dining room, where the buffet table was set with a large bowl of spring flowers as a centerpiece, and into the salon at the other side where beverages were served.

Among the early guests was Mme. van-Haersma de With, wife of the Netherlands Minister, who wore a smart black costume; Mrs. William E. Borah and the Misses Patten who enjoyed watching Didi with her box of gifts; Mrs. Louis Schapiro and her son, Mr. Mark Schapiro, who were accompanied by Mme. Castro Beeche, wife of the Costa Rican Minister and Mme. Castro, wife of the Minister of El Salvador; Mr. and Mrs. Barge Hartz with her debutant daughter, Miss Bette Hartz, who wore a bright spring print and a little straw hat.

Mrs. Swanson Also Attends.

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, who had just returned from a luncheon in Annapolis at which she was a guest of honor, wore a black frock with a corsage of apple blossoms. She talked with Mrs. Mark Bristol, and both were frequently interrupted as friends stopped to greet them. Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the Attorney General, was wearing brown, her close-fitting mink-trimmed hat matching her dress and mink muff. Mme. Sze, wife of the Ambassador of China; Mme. Saito, wife of the Japanese Ambassador; the Chilean Ambassador, Senor Don Manuel Trucio, with his daughters, Senoritas Marta and Rebecca, both in brown costumes; the Ambassador of Peru, Senor Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander, the Minister of Yugoslavia and Mme. Fotich, were all among the guests.

Others were the Counselor of the Yugoslavian Legation and Mme. Perazic, the latter in black, her coat heavily trimmed in silver fox and her black gloves embroidered in various designs in color; Mrs. Ernest Draper, in Oxford gray; Mrs. Peleny, wife of the Minister of Hungary; Mrs. Thomas Dawson, with her daughter, Miss Lilita Dawson; Dr. Nelson Darton, who arrived early and was joined later by Mrs. Darton; Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, Dr. and Mrs. William Jennings Price, the former President of Nicaragua and Mme. Araya, Mrs. William S. Culbertson, Baroness von Below, in violet velvet; Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr, Frau Scholz and Mme. von Boetticher, of the German Embassy; Senor Francisco Castillo Najera and Senor Luis Castillo Najera, young sons of the Mexican Ambassador; Mrs. Malin Craig, Col. and Mrs. Jonathan Wainwright, Mrs. Gerald Linke and her sister, Mrs. R. B. Buchanan, Mr. Philip Broad, Mr. and Mrs. Abbott Ginniss and the former President of Panama and Senora de Alfaro.

Miss Thompson Becomes Bride

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Miss Fredrica Ray Thompson, daughter of Mrs. James Furlong Thompson, Jr., and the late Mr. Thompson, of Martinsburg, Va., and Hagerstown, Md., to Mr. John Griffin Byrer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry H. Byrer.

The marriage took place Saturday morning in Arlington Methodist Episcopal Church South, Baltimore, of which the bride and her family are members. The ceremony was read by the Rev. Haskell R. Deal, pastor, in the presence of the immediate family.

The bride wore her mother's wedding gown of ivory satin and duchesse lace, fashioned on empire lines, and a simple tulle veil held in place by pearls that had been worn by her mother and grandmother. Her only attendant was her sister, Miss Nell Thompson, whose dress was an ivory moire print with quaint pastel colored flowers.

Mr. Byrer's attendant was his brother, Mr. Harry Byrer, Jr.

After outlining the social, economic and political factors that led to the formation of the present German government, Dr. Bohn will discuss the youth movement, the work army, and the significance to the rest of the world of the German program for rearmament.

Dr. Bohn, in his third lecture on "Following the News," to be given at the Mayflower Hotel this morning at 11:30, will speak on "Hitler's Germany—The War Tomorrow."

THE MERRY WHIRL

By Marylyn.

It is such fun to go behind the scenes—how about coming with us to the rehearsals of "Hoof Prints," that thrilling pageant to be given at Fort Meyer? Surely your day's business has been attended to so as to allow a trip to the Army post—a lightning flight of fancy and we are in the huge riding hall.

It is exactly 1 o'clock and the first thing on the program is the rehearsal for the Circus Act. Art Thayer, John Reynolds and Betty Carter practicing their "wild stallions of Arabia" in fancy, prancy steps. George Millholland, the lion tamer and his dog, Kiko, the "wild lion of the Nubian desert," surrounded by a maze of barrels, hoops and planks. Kiko refusing to sit on the plank. George petting, spanking and feeding him choice tid-bits when he does well. The flying trapeze artists, the riding Galloways. Much excitement and chaos and the act moves out.

Next there is the Pages' Drill, better known as the tandems. Into the hall, 16 horses with saddles, preceded by 16 without and with nothing to manage them except a long pair of drawing reins. Capt. Leslie Carter's call, "All tandem girls in the ring!" Up they mount and away they go. Pretty little Natalie Sutherland's horse shying at the movement of an evergreen tree and off she goes. Just one more event in the life of a tandem rider. The drill gets under way. Smooth, graceful and expertly done.

At 2:30 o'clock the Coventry riders are in the ring. The ladies on side-saddles and the gentlemen riding in the conventional manner (wonder which is the easier). Florence Harris and Bill Winfield, Dianne Rowland and Jack Simpson, Grace O'Hara and Doc Shupp, all trotting by gracefully. Won't they be perfect in the costume of the period!

Now, brush jumps are being moved into the hall, placed here, there and everywhere. The hall is literally teeming with jumps and set for the hunt ride. And now they are mounted. Twelve lovely girls, acting and no doubt feeling very much at home on the hurricane decks of their jumpers. Now they are joined by their escorts and away they go riding in couples. The first pair goes over the course of jumps that Jimmy Duke has contrived. No hesitancy, no faltering and with the speed of the wind. Louisa Myers and Johnny Pugh, Perfect! Who is this next pair? Oh, yes; Margaret Cotter and George Grunert. Over the first one in grand style, and on to the next. Bang! George Grunert's horse hits one and in less time than it takes to say it George has landed in the tank for a new distance record. Off again, on again, away again. And

The Rev. John Leffler performed the ceremony, which was followed by a small reception at the home of Mrs. Orr for members of the family and close friends. The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. H. W. Dakin, of Pasadena. She wore a frock of pale pink marquisette with a coronet headdress of apple blossoms, from which fell a shoulder veil of pink starched mesh. She carried lilies of the valley and pink bavardias.

Her maid of honor and only attendant was Mrs. Marjorie Pittman, who wore a marquisette frock in an aquamarine shade with a matching hat trimmed with pink. She carried roses in three shades of pink.

Mrs. Crosby, mother of the bride, assisted in receiving, and wore a frock of sapphire colored marquisette. The house was decorated with fruit blossoms, white iris, white wisteria and pink tulips.

After the reception the young couple left for a wedding trip in Mexico, the bride wearing a black suit with a hat to match and a corsage of gardenias and lilies of the valley. On their return Mr. Orr and his bride will reside in Los Angeles.

Grove Boasts Of Ample Space For Its Dancers

Lack of Crowding Stressed at Night Club; Spots Have New Shows.

By Chanticleer.

Cocoanut Grove would like you to know that the Grove is the answer to the question: Can a night spot be good fun without also being about the size of a hat box and with a dance floor of postage stamp size. The Grove insists that dancing is a double pleasure on its floor because the dancer needs no shin guards and shoulder pads for toe-ticking satisfaction. In other words, they say out there that they prove a nightery doesn't have to be crowded, smoky and stifling to be good fun.

On the Grove's floor this week are Tania and Kiroff, the snake and knife-flipping dancers. Also Ray Beck, Charley Jeeter, Frank McCormick and Emory Daugherty and their respective talents.

Some magic combination of lighting and blue glass has made the Raleigh's Pall Mall room a delight for the dancers. They can see themselves in their best advantage in the many mirrors that flank the dance floor. Every girl looks glamorous in this popular supper spot. Kadine and Kirk are dancing there this week.

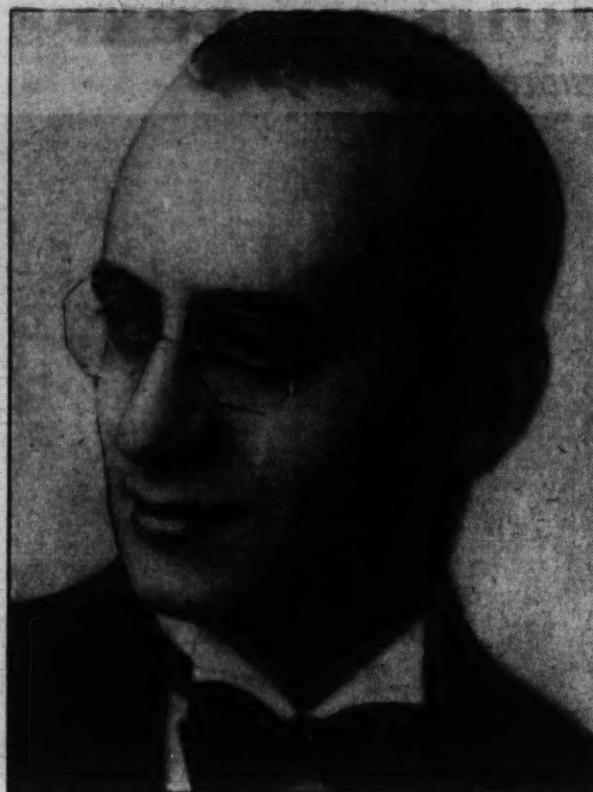

The Winstead Trio stars on the floor at the Lotus this week, a team that originated right here in Washington. The Elton Trio also has been held over by popular demand. Paul Florenz's D'Lovalles polish off the show with amari routines and lovely costumes. Al Norton is master of ceremonies, with Bill Strickland and his orchestra for your dancing.

Arthur Warren insists that the tango is the thing. He reports that students from George Washington vie nightly with students from Georgetown to see who can tango the best. That would be out there at the Wardman Park Metronome Room. Maestro Warren also maintains that he's the best interpreter of South American dance music in this country. Take it or leave it, you'll find his picture, by the way, on the cover of the new tune, "What Will I Tell My Heart."

Portia Portar remains at the Carlton's El Patio three days longer only. She sprained her ankle a few days ago but she has been getting on most gamely—dancing, rope twirling and acrobatics, just as though the ankle didn't hurt. She's the only American girl bull fighter, and hurt the limb in attempting from a plain, ordinary automobile in front of the Y. W. C. A.

Only two more days and spring is officially here—and the Shoreham already is taking on the color of the season. New gorgeous evening gowns, new styles and even new affluences among the patrons. Willie Powers is now being introduced on a new dance in the current floor show at the Russian Troika. Most elaborately embroidered costumes yet seen are used. Very often the performers at this Russian rendezvous make their own costumes. They're positively authentic that way.

The impromptu entertainment at the Ambassador's El Hat brings out some surprisingly good talent, according to the Royal Hawaiians. As they wander about the room, they encourage the audience to sing with them. Sometimes the whole room bursts forth in a popular tune. And it is in these little informalities that real quality in a voice comes out every so often.

The half-hour swing session nightly at the Madrilion is going across very nicely, thank you. The customers always want more than they get and that is the way to do things. Helen Forrest sings with Johnny Shaw's group in these miniature "jam" sessions. The little hi-de-ho girl has a birthday April 20, so they say.

inspected by Magistrate Le Girard, who noted officially it "showed signs of singular disorder as though visitors had gotten in despite the placing of seals on it."

It was sealed last night by police shortly after the shooting occurred.

Lawyer Plans Defense.

Her lawyer, however, said his client explained the disorder, "attributing it to her great nervousness and the little care she took to leave it neat."

He added, "I have already decided on the principal theme of my case. She confided things to De Chamberlain, asking his word as Ambassador that he not repeat them."

"My client contends—and I will uphold that version—that De Chamberlain betrayed her confidence, thus breaking a great love of her life, a love which was exasperated, which she could not master and which led her to wound the one she held responsible for her despair."

District Kiwanians Memorialize Hill

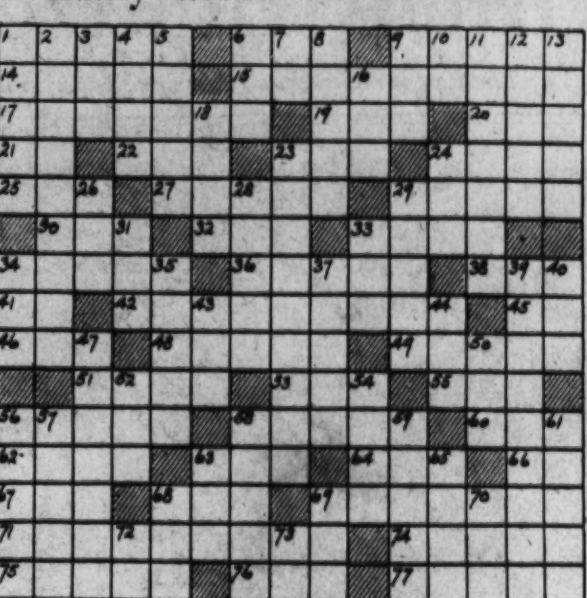

A resolution mourning the death of Edwin F. Hill was adopted yesterday afternoon by the Kiwanis Club of Washington. Hill had been one of the club's most active members.

Drafted and read by the Rev. Oscar Blackwelder, the resolution, after praising the nobleness of Hill's life, said: "The members of the Kiwanis Club of Washington, busy men though they are, will take more time henceforth for the nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and love which are the best part of a good man's life. The remarkably large number of men who gathered to pay last respect at Ed Hill's passing were not there to honor his business success, rather they were there because they had lost a sincere friend who was for them a living definition of the word 'gentleman'."

As an additional mark of respect the meeting adjourned immediately after adoption of the resolution.

Earlier in the luncheon, held at the Mayflower Hotel, three new members were welcomed into the club. They are Dr. Steven Bockoven, J. Elliot Middleton and John J. Hanley.

End of Nazi Blasts Indicated as Hull Repeats Apology

Berlin, March 18 (AP)—A foreign office spokesman indicated tonight German press criticism of the United States will cease with a communique concerning the latest representations which Germany has made to Secretary of State Cordell Hull over the "LaGuardia incidents."

Ambassador Hans Luther's report had not been received tonight, so the communique was withheld. Unofficially, the German news agency informed the foreign office Secretary Hull had, in effect, repeated a previous apology for attacks upon Chancellor Hitler by New York's mayor.

Meanwhile, two new press attacks were published. The Berlin Lokal-Anzeiger suggested Washington issue "an edict to protect government leaders and institutions of foreign states" and said "anti-German agitation has reached the point of war days."

The Hamburg Fremdenblatt avowed LaGuardia "himself feel encouraged for news escapades by Washington's weak attitude."

Bridges Asks Calm Study Of Jail Laxity Charges

Senator H. Styles Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, yesterday called for a calm judicial approach in the investigation of alleged irregularities at the Portsmouth (N. H.) Naval Prison.

He declined to enlarge on his statement in a letter to the Secretary of the Navy advising an investigation, and he pointed out that he has made no official statements on conditions at the prison other than those in the letter. He said he "deplored" attempts to sensationalize unconfirmed rumors of conditions at the prison, and declared he believed such attempts were unfair to prison officials.

On the Air Today

"Amos 'n' Andy" celebrate their ninth anniversary of broadcasting this evening. The series of programs when Bill Hay handles the team over to the radio audience tonight, WRC, at 7.

Fredman F. Gooden as "Amos" and Charles J. Correll as "Andy" have been heard in more than 8,000 broadcasts. Their first program with N.B.C. was August 19, 1928. Since then more than 4,100 broadcasts have been made for that network.

The first "Amos 'n' Andy" broadcast was on March 19, 1928, from WMAQ in Chicago. Previously, outcasts in the Middle West will remember, they had been known as "Sam 'n' Henry." Those were the early days of broadcasting at WGN. Only once, as "Amos 'n' Andy," have the boys missed a broadcast. That happened right here in Washington when they went hunting for ducks and failed to return on time. Some were unkind enough at that time to whisper that the failure to make air time was a deliberate publicity stunt! Tsk! Tsk!

Gooden was born in Richmond, Va., in 1889. Correll's grandmother was a cousin of President Jeff Davis of the Confederacy. He was born in Peoria, Ill. The two men met at Durham, N. C. in 1920. They were then independently engaged in staging amateur theatricals. Following a decision to team together, they went to Chicago and sang for months at a radio station there without pay.

They wrote their own scripts, and always on the day of the broadcast.

Phil Merryman, operations supervisor of the National Broadcasting Company, stationed for the last few years here, has been transferred to New York—to the Station's Relations Department. Don Cooper, control supervisor, has been promoted to Merryman's vacated position. Robert Terrill becomes senior control supervisor and Dawson A. Ullman becomes junior control supervisor.

Perhaps these names mean nothing to listeners—as names—but back of all broadcast programs is the strength and skill of the engineering department. You hear the names of the artists and the announcers—but this department is always ready to take its worn chapeau off to the gentlemen of the controls.

Features today:
Grand National Steeplechase—From Aintree by short wave, WMAQ, at 10 a. m. (This is the big event on which the frowned on lottery is based.)
San Juan Swallows—As for the last 69 years, are expected today at the Mission in California, WMAQ, at 1:45.
School children—To hear quarter hour of "Aids" from Metropolitan Opera House, WMAQ, at 3.
Cincinnati Symphony—Directed by Eugene Goossens, with Bronislaw Huberman, violinist, WJVS, at 3.
Also the premiere of Emerson Whithorne's Second Symphony.
Tour of Washington—An opportunity to hear how the home town is described to distant listeners as a mythical tour is made by "Education in the News" WMAQ, at 6.
"Top of the Town"—Preview of new picture, with Gertrude Niesen, Hugh Herbert, Gregory Ratoff and Henry Armetia, "Hollywood Hotel," WJVS, at 9.
Jack Pearl—Begins a new series at a new hour, WMAQ, at 9:30 Fridays.

Louisiana State University—Is scene of "Varsity Show," WRC, at 10:30.

Here and there: When "Hitch Your Wagon" opens at the Belasco March 20, Kenneth Roberts will be in the cast. Roberts, as you will remember, is the announcer for the Saturday night "Johnny" and the Philharmonic broadcasts. To the Easter schedule of C. B. S. has been added an early morning talk by Pope Pius, who will broadcast a benediction to the world from St. Peter's Cathedral. Ray Noble and his orchestra have been signed for the new series of Burns and Allen broadcasts beginning April 12.

Uniform Sales Act Signed by President

All commercial transactions in the District will be placed on a statutory basis July 1 under the terms of a bill which became a law yesterday upon being signed by President Roosevelt.

Known as the uniform sales act, the law is similar to acts in operation in 43 States, including Maryland and Virginia. It not only codifies all previous statutes relating to buying and selling in Washington, but establishes new statutes where common law and practice have hitherto prevailed.

The bill was in Congress several years before it was approved by the House and the Senate.

Where Blast Killed Hundreds of Pupils in Texas School

The Post is the only daily morning paper in Washington with A. P. WIREPHOTO Service.

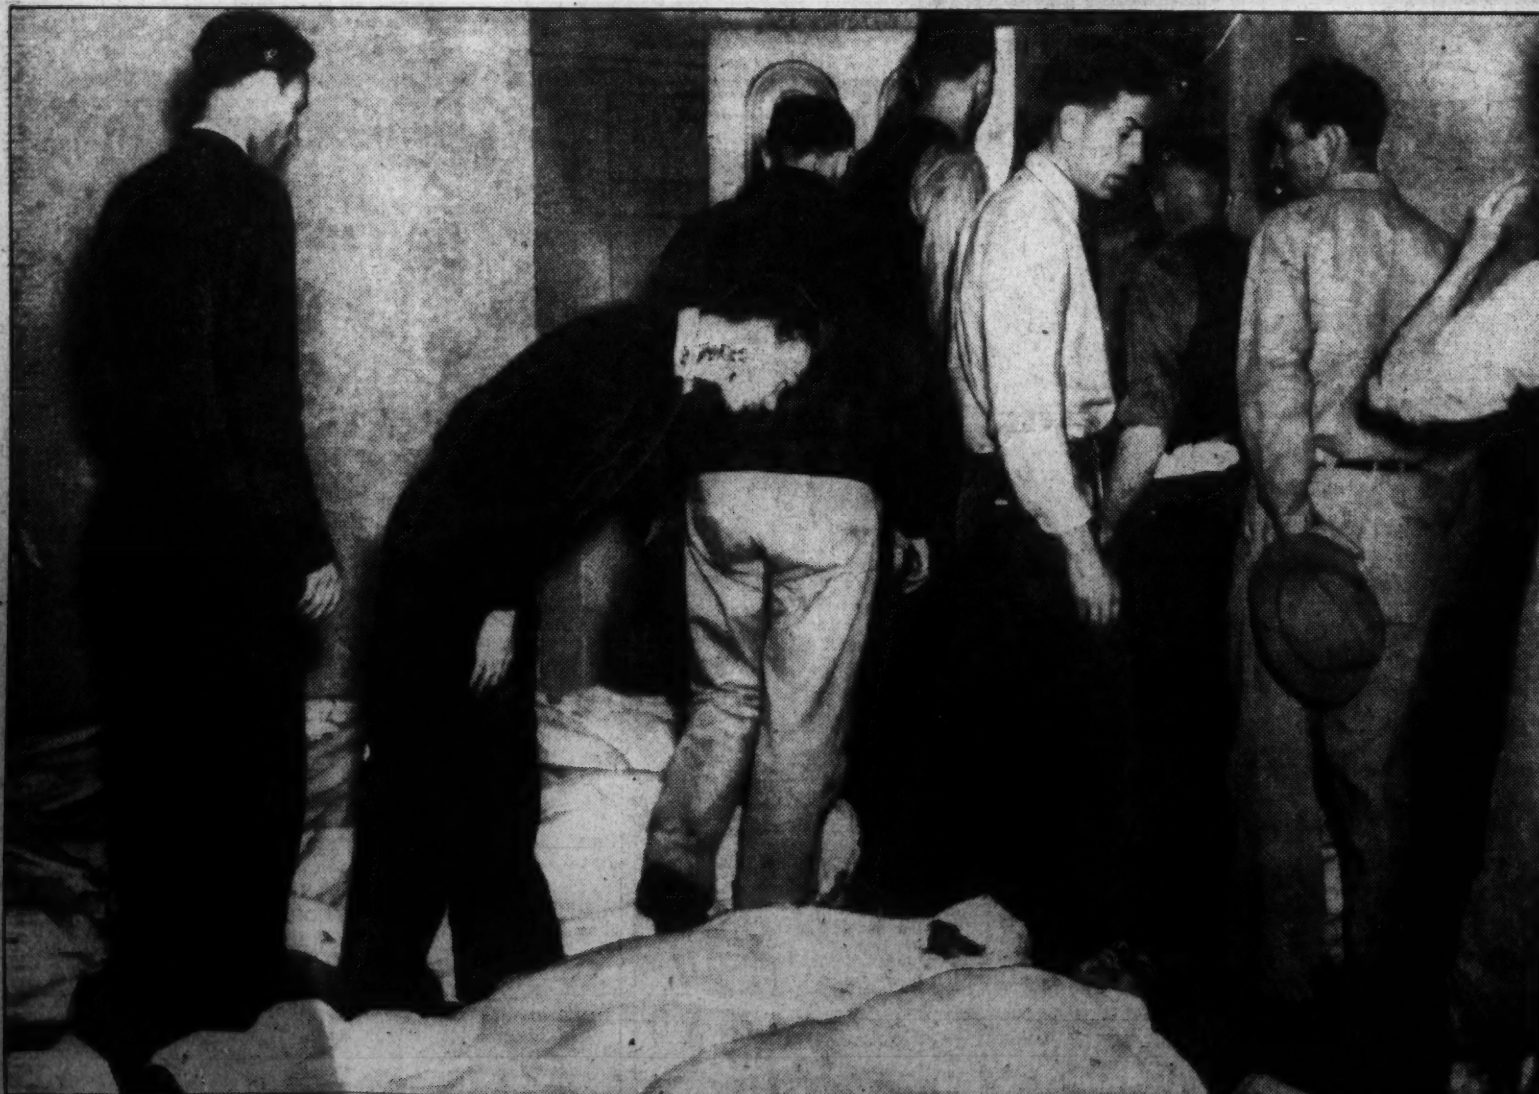

FIRST PICTURES OF SCHOOL DISASTER—Frenzied parents and volunteer rescue workers searching through ruins of Consolidated School at New London, Tex., where more than 600 pupils and a number of teachers were killed. At right, relief workers bringing out body of a boy.

EVIDENCE OF FURY OF THE BLAST—Section of the new $1,000,000 schoolhouse which shows how the force of the explosion tore away a great part of the thick brick fire wall. At an early hour this morning the cause of the blast was still undetermined.

TERROR-STRICKEN MOTHERS GATHER WHERE THEIR CHILDREN DIED. With hands to faces, mothers of children attending the Consolidated School gather outside the safety lines hurriedly set up by volunteers who sought to recover bodies of the little victims.

RELATIVES SEEK DEAD IN IMPROVISED MORGUE—Long lines of relatives scanned hundreds of mutilated bodies of children in stores and halls where the bodies were laid out. It is believed some of the bodies, buried beneath tons of the wreckage, can't be removed until late today.

PORTABLE DERRICKS RUSHED TO SCENE—Oil field companies quickly rushed all available tackle, tools and portable derricks in the area. Workmen and engineers were sped to New London in fast motors, while State agencies brought officers in from different sections of the country.

This Morning

Orlando, Fla., March 17.
If they were to tell the truth:
Will Harridge, president of the American League: It will not be a wide-open race this year. Every club in the league could save itself a lot of trouble by conceding the pennant to the Yankees. The Yanks are making a joke out of pennant races. The others are hopeless.
Ford Frick, president of the National League: Ditto. Just substitute Cardinals for Yankees and National League for American League and what Frick will say goes for me.
Lou Gehrig: Of course I'm not serious about this salary hold-out. Fact is, I've already signed, but I'm not sure it's good business to draw things out. The newsgirls haven't yet arrived at St. Pete.
When they do, we'll put on the act for 'em.
Col. Ruppert: Lou Gehrig is a shoost a nice fellow. I've never had no trouble with Lou. Mitt Lou, we've got the pennant. The Yankees must have lost it.
Dizzy Dean: The Cardinals know I'll be in there pitching the opening game if I have to pay my way into the park, dammit. But it's beneath the dignity of the great Dean to accept terms at this early date.
Branch Rickey: I could save my breath by having a record made of these ultimatum to Dizzy. It's the same story every year. We always compromise, and Dizzy always signs. We aren't worried.
Connie Mack: This bunch of carry leaguers on my club couldn't bash the bats for those fellows who used to win pennants for me. But the overhead is low and I can make money with 'em.
Clark Griffith: Cecil Travis is a great shortstop—I hope. He was a flop last year and great shortstops are born, not made. But there's nothing like trying.
Shanty Hogan: Sure, I've lost 35 pounds, but it's no fun. I ain't eating starches, but I'm always hungry. Baseball ain't no man's game, but if Griff and Harris think I can catch, who am I to dispute 'em? Babe Ruth: You can say for me that I am done with baseball and harbor no ill will. But there's an ungrateful lot not to give me a shot at managing a big league club after all I've done for the game.
Buck Newsom: Any time Washington trades me, I won't break down and weep. For two years, now, they've been dropping the other pitchers in the soft spots and saving me for Grove and Gomez and Bridges and Rowe, and ruining my winning percentage. Maybe I'd get a break with another club.
It is a fair guess that the first razzberry was wafted from the dugout to the diamond on that afternoon in Cooperstown, N. Y., 1939 when the late Mr. Abner Doubleday laid out the first diamond. Surely it has been a part of the game within the memory of the oldest inhabitants.
Few are the ball players who are not sensitive on some point, and they've been dropping the other pitchers in the soft spots and saving me for Grove and Gomez and Bridges and Rowe, and ruining my winning percentage. Maybe I'd get a break with another club.
Ty Cobb was universally razzed by fans throughout the league, and by most of the rival players, but on one club—the Athletics—there were strict orders never to heckle Cobb, never to direct even one derogatory remark toward him.
Ed Ruppel, former pitching star of the A's, now turned umpire, revealed that Connie Mack was particularly careful not to enrage the Georgia Peach.
"Connie always told us to keep our mouths shut when Cobb was playing against the A's. He didn't want to make Cobb mad. When Cobb got that way, according to Connie, who ought to know, he was twice as good a ball player as normally, and he was tough enough in a peaceful frame of mind."

Still Wanna Fight?

DON'T PULL AWAY FROM PUNCHES... INSTEAD OF PULLING BACK, SQUAT UNDER THE WALLOP...

Some Pointers on the Vital Art Of Blocking, Ducking Blows

(This is the fifth in a series on How to Box. Admitting he couldn't fight his way out of a dilemma, the writer has turned to masters of the game for lessons on their pet punches or specialties.)

Blocking is an important in the fight game as in the hat cleaning business.

Counter punching, or the art of tossing a wallop while blocking, goes hand in hand with the business of picking blows out of the air.

For some reason, Negroes usually are better natural blockers and counter punchers than white fighters. Joe Louis is at his best when counter punching.

Jack Johnson, the only Negro ever to hold the heavyweight championship, generally was rated the best blocker and punch dodger of all time. It is from his methods that we will draw our instruction on the delicate subject of avoiding artichoke ears.

As pointed out in the first lesson, the left jab and hat-tipping right take care of the fundamentals of defense. Under ordinary circumstances you shouldn't need to know any more.

In boxing, extraordinary circumstances are much more common than ordinary circumstances, or is that too paradoxical? In the noble cause of keeping the profile undented, we give you a few fine pointers on the business of inserting a mitten between your anatomy and a lusty larp.

Johnson, whose reactions were phenomenal, could halt an opponent's punch almost before the opponent himself knew he was going to swing.

One of "Lil' Abner's" pet peeve provokers was the business of blocking punches with his thumbs! An opponent would indicate ever so slightly that he intended to lose a punch. Johnson would stick his thumb in the bicep of the arm to be swung—and that arm was paralyzed as effectively as a walkathon during a sit-down strike.

Ordinary mortals can't block with thumbs, but you will find that the open hand can stop a punch in the same manner. When you've stopped that punch don't be satisfied. Punch with the other hand before your opponent collects his wits—or should be say milt?

In blocking or ducking don't waste motion. A punch that misses by an eyelash inflicts no more damage than one which is a foot wide of the mark. A glove, elbow or shoulder which is to form a barricade need not be jerked into guarding position, but should be slid into position with the rhythm and grace advocated by Benny Leonard.

In ducking a punch, duck just enough to make it miss—or even graze. The way you will not be forced out of position and set floundering around like Leon Errol on stilts. In boxing, one flounder and you're a dead duck.

Don't pull away from punches if you can help it. Instead of pulling back, squat under the wallop. This helps maintain balance and puts you in position to fire with both hands as your opponent is off balance from the miss.

A right hand can be blocked either with a left glove, or its effect may be nullified by a left jab. Of course, the jab must get home before the right hand or you're a deceased Mallard again.

The left is taken care of as well it can be as long as you keep your right tipping that imaginary hat, which must be almost worn out by now if you've been practicing your shadow boxing as you should.

Speed and hair-trigger reactions are essential in blocking and ducking as in no other phase of boxing.

Jim Wasdell Is Shunted To Nat Farm

$20,000 Rookie Goes to Chattanooga on 24-Hour Recall Notice.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 18.—Jim Wasdell, the $20,000 rookie first baseman from Minneapolis who had provided the early sensations of the Nats' training camp, tonight was dispatched to the minor leagues.

Wasdell was the first of the Washington rookies to feel the managerial axe. Manager Bucky Harris called the 20-year-old lad away from his dinner, draped a paternal arm across his shoulders, and informed Wasdell that he was being sent to the Nats' Chattanooga farm.

The Nats retained an option on Wasdell and can recall him on 24-hour notice.

Despite the talents displayed by Wasdell in his workouts with the Nats, when he exhibited himself as both a vicious hitter and fancy fielder, he never figured largely in Harris' 1937 plans. The presence of Joe Kuhel on first base virtually precluded any chance for Wasdell.

Wasdell, who came to the Nats during the winter in the deal that sent the veterans Carl Reynolds and Red Kress to Minneapolis in addition to a sum of cash announced as $3,500, is tabbed by Manager Harris as a sure-fire big leaguer within a season or two.

Harris has declared that Wasdell at his disposal he would not be adverse to trading First Baseman Joe Kuhel in any deal that would be advantageous to the Nats.

Hitting Is Good.
It is being noted about the league that the Washington club is top-heavy with left-handed hitters and fancy fielders. Manager Bucky Harris is still showing a fine concern for that fact.

Today, he snapped back sharply at a visiting correspondent who yesterday belted that the Nats lacked right-handed hitting strength.

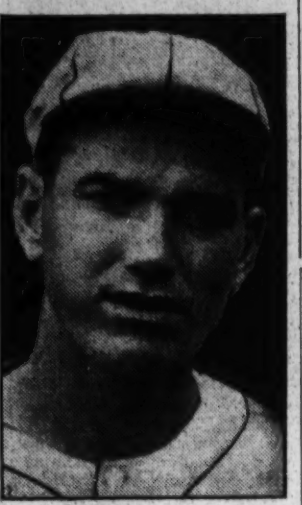

"So what?" demanded Harris. "I'll take my chances with the hitters we've got, even if they are all left-handed."

And then the Nats' manager launched into a string of defenses of his batting order which shows an infield comprised of southpaw hitters exclusively, one left-hander in the outfield, and another southpaw when Cliff Bolton is working behind the bat.

"If you're asking me," continued Harris, "all those left-handers give us a big edge. Maybe they don't."

'Bluff' Is Called

DIZZY DEAN.

Joe Dusek Downs Meske; Wrestling Proves Exciting

Joe Dusek rolled over, but he refused to play dead before Ed Maske at Turner's Arena last night. As a result, Maske was declared downed after 29 minutes of exciting action.

In a co-feature, also scheduled to a finish, Rudy Dusek was disqualified after 18 minutes of brawling with Hank Barber.

The entire card was so hair-raising that it kept the capacity audience jumping up and down like a flock of school boys with St. Vitus dance on pogo sticks. A burly police lieutenant and a flock of his minions were kept busy shooting enraged customers away from the ringside, a preliminary grappler socked a hot-headed spectator, one lady fainted and it was all some fun.

Joe Dusek and Meske were out of the ring almost as much as they were in it. After kicking each other all over the joint for almost half an hour, Meske finally clamped on a figure-four arm lock and rolled Joe over time and time again.

Somehow, Joe turned the tables on Al Bakash long enough for Referee Al Bakash to count 1-2-3 all in one breath.

Rudy Dusek was disqualified for trying to beat Barber's brains out against a ringpost—or maybe he was trying to break up the ringpost. Anyway, he had Hank's head out of the ring and was climbing it against the metal support which holds up the ring when Referee Bakash ruled him out.

George Koverley, the wild one, stopped Mike Sterlich in 9½ minutes of a scheduled 30-minute preliminary.

Woe Willie Davis, another of the better mat villains, downed Jim Coffield in 30½ minutes, and Bill (Whiskers) Lewis, the reformed wrestling promoter, triumphed over Harry Finkelstein in 9½ minutes.

Pitcher Ends Siege, Club Holds Ground

Gehrig Signs Contract for $36,750, Getting Raise of $5,750.

Cards Had Accepted His Resignation Earlier; Wires President.

By the Associated Press.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 18.—Lou Gehrig and the New York Yankees split their salary differences today bringing the durable first baseman into the fold for $36,000 wages plus $750 for signing his contract.

Gehrig and the Yankees got together this morning. In a telephone conversation with Joe McCarthy, Yankee manager, who was in New York, the veteran first baseman who has played upward of 1,800 ball games for the New York Club without a miss since replacing Wally Pipp in 1925, came to terms after only brief haggling.

Gehrig first demanded a two-year contract calling for $40,000 per season. Advised by McCarthy that both the $40,000 and the two-year contract were out, he trimmed his demands to $37,500. The club had offered him $36,000.

At the request of McCarthy, Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the Yankees who is vacationing here during the spring training season, agreed to split the difference.

Gehrig will sign for $36,000 when he arrives here Saturday morning and will receive Col. Ruppert's personal check for $750 as a gift for signing the one-year document.

Weighing 215 pounds and full of the spirit of compromise, the slugger first baseman claims he "would have stood in bed" rather than play for $31,000.

"Until two weeks ago Col. Ruppert insisted he would not pay me a cent more than he did last year. I thought that was unfair, in view of the record last year, and I'd have stayed right here in New Rochelle until October if he hadn't offered more," said Lou.

Though Gehrig originally asked for far more than he's getting, he said he was satisfied and eager to get to camp.

"I admit I'm a late starter, and I'll have to work all the harder now," he said. His present weight of 215 is "just about right," he added.

The only player now out of the New York fold is Pitcher Charley (Red) Ruffing, who has been offered $15,000 and wants $16,000.

Following are verified figures on the money originally asked by the numerous outstanding Yankee hold-outs together with the sums they signed for and the raises they received.

	Demand	Rec'd	Raise
Lou Gehrig	$50,000	$36,000	$5,000
Dimaggio	25,000	15,000	5,500
Puckey	25,000	18,000	3,500
Pearson	15,000	12,000	4,000
Crosetti	15,000	13,000	3,000
Lazzeri	16,000	14,000	2,000
Powell	14,000	9,000	3,000

Pitcher Lefty Gomez, who took a $7,500 cut to $12,500, was the only star to get less than he did last year.

Daytona Beach, Fla., March 19 (Friday) (A.P.).—Sam Bredon, president of the St. Louis Cardinals, early today said that Dizzy Dean had wired him he had signed his contract and would report for spring training today.

Bredon did not disclose the terms, although it is understood the Cardinals had offered Dean $24,000.

Dean's hand was called by the St. Louis Cardinals management last night when Bredon announced that the pitcher's "resignation" had been accepted and had been forwarded to Ford Frick, president of the National League.

Bredon said he received Dizzy's letter asking voluntary retirement shortly after 6 o'clock last night. It was mailed from Bradenton, Dizzy's winter home town.

Bredon refused to make public the full contents of the communication.

"Dizzy's Business."
"In brief it said," explained Bredon, "that he was writing Landis asking to be placed on the voluntary retired list and that he was seeking approval of the Cardinal club."

"I am writing President Ford Frick of the National League that we approve Dizzy's request."

When asked if he had any other plans relative to the Dean situation Bredon replied:

"None. We cannot force Dizzy to remain in baseball. If he feels he can make more money in another profession that is his business. Dizzy has taken this step and we will not attempt to get him to change his mind."

Forgotten Man.
Branch Rickey, vice president, said:

"The case has been in Mr. Bredon's hands. I will not alter my statement of several days ago in which I said that if Dean remains out of baseball one year he will be the forgotten man of the game."

Frankie Frisch, manager, was apprised of Dizzy's step.

"There's nothing lost to me to add," commented Frisch. "We'll be out there hustling in typical gas-house gang fashion, Dizzy or no Dizzy."

Members of the Cardinals were canvassed for an expression on Dizzy's unexpected move. They refused to comment.

Glen Falls Tournery Lure for Western High Court Team

Western High School yesterday accepted an invitation to play in the annual Eastern States basketball tournament to be held at Glens Falls, N. Y., April 1, 2 and 3. Coach Cliff Moore formally accepted by wire after permission had been granted by Principal Elmer S. Newton and Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou.

Western's entrance gives Washington representation in the classic for the third straight year. Eastern High participated in 1935 and 1936. The Lincoln Parkers won the event in their first visit to the city at the headquarters of the Hudson.

Championship high and prep schools from Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, New England and New York City customarily compete. Western is at present in its third straight tournament, about to meet St. John's Prep tomorrow for the Metropolitan title.

Empty Bottle, $4.70 Favorite, Takes Tropical Park Feature

Colt Carries Top Weight To Triumph

Son of Jock Clocked in 1:11.3-5; Daily Double Ridden by Wright.

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, Fla., March 18.—Mrs. E. B. Carpenter's fleet 4-year-old, Empty Bottle, continued his winning ways here today when he defeated four other shifty sprinters in the 6 furlongs of the Palm Island Handicap, a class "B" event for 3-year-olds and upward. Winner of the last start over an off track, the bay son of Jock-Bit O Regret today made his only pace over a fast strip and clicked with a length to spare in 1:11.3-5.

F. L. Tyler's Finisher, upon which Wayne Wright was trying for a triple, was an easy second, three lengths better than T. F. Swords' Vote Boy. Stubbs and Kievels completed the small field as named. Empty Bottle was installed favorite, paying $4.70 for $2.

Carrying topweight of 118 pounds, which included the seasoned Tammy May, Empty Bottle had both speed and gameness on his side. He broke fourth in a good start, then rushed up to assume a one-length lead over the speedy but stopping Stubbs.

The latter developed that fatigued feeling around the bend as Wright shot Finisher through on the inside to offer chief contention to the ultimate victor. Empty Bottle refused to give ground in the closing drive. Vote Boy, which likes to run in front, could not get there, and beat a fired horse in Stubbs for the show. Kievels, after a long rest, never was a factor.

In one of the most stirring photo finishes of the season, Stool Pigeon caught a nose decision over Second Guess in the six-furlong pair-raiser. Five lengths behind the pair came Jack Snipe to land third money. Wayne Wright had Stool Pigeon in front from flag to finish. The $4.80 for $2 shot held a daylight lead into the stretch, where the favorite, Second Guess made a game but futile charge on the outside of the winner. The time was 1:12.4-5.

Wayne Wright, by guiding the well-played Empty Bottle to the filly's second straight score in the second race, rode both winners in the daily double combination, which returned $45 and $22.50 for $1, paying $8.70 and second choice to the dull running Lucky Jean, registered by a length and a half in a drive.

Long-shot players received a thrill when Sweep Boy, paying $122.30 place and $34.40 show, finished second by two lengths over Company. Sweep Boy, had he won, would have paid off of $151.40 for $1. The long shot fought it out with Lpo Facto all the way, but could not hold his narrow early lead.

Oddess Lady, a filly that was deprived of the purse in her last start through being carried almost to the outside fence at the stretch turn, came back to score by four lengths in the half mile dash for 2-year-olds fillies that was third on the card.

Hubert Le Blanc passed Albert Schmidt as leading local rider for the first time at the current meeting when he guided the suddenly improved Khay to a length and a half victory in the fourth, a test of 1 mile for 3-year-old players. The Omar Khayyam colt had all the speed and led virtually from the start. He returned $24.60 and gave Le Blanc his tenth success here. Madonna forced the pace and had six lengths to spare over the standard choice, Molasses Bob, for the place. Molasses Bob lacked the speed to keep out and barely got up for third position.

Fair Grounds Entries.

FIRST RACE—Six furlongs, purse, $700; claiming for 3-year-olds and upward. 10:00 a.m. 1.
